Harvard won the third game of the series on June 10. Princeton undoubtedly made as poor a display in the field as had been seen for a number of years. From the very beginning Princeton played poorly. Harvard, however, played worse, and allowed Princeton to obtain a lead of three runs. In the first inning, neither side scored. In the second, Stevenson scored for Harvard on errors by Sankey and Kelly. At the beginning of the seventh, the score stood 5-2. A single hit, an error by Kelly, and Burgess, who was hit by a pitched ball, filled the bases. Rand then knocked a three-base hit, bringing them all in, and tying the score. The bases were filled again in the eighth, when Clarkson made a single hit, and brought in Dean and Burgess. Chandler had already scored, and Princeton was defeated, for she could hit nothing but high flies in the ninth.

Earned Runs, P. 2, Y. 1. Stolen Bases, Easton, Bradley, Letton, DeSaulles 2, Smith. 2 Base Hits, Altman, Keator, Greenway, Smith 2. Double Play, Ward-Sankey-Bradley. Struck Out by Wilson 5, Greenway 6. Bases on Balls, off Wilson 3, Greenway 4. Hit by Pitched Ball, Letton. Passed Balls, Smith, Murphy 1. Time, 2 hours and 25 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Betts.

In the fourth Yale game, on June 13, Keator was the first man at the bat, but Wilson threw him out at first. Quinby struck out, and Greenway knocked a hot liner to Bradley, but reached first in safety. The side was retired when Letton was thrown out by Wilson to Bradley. Princeton was more fortunate in her half. After two men were out, Bradley got his base on balls, promptly stole second, and scored on Titus' single hit. Yale failed to score in the second, but Princeton scored twice by the two-base hits of Altman and Smith and Murphy's bad throw. Yale scored her first run in the fourth inning, when DeSaulles got to first on Gunster's bad throw, and scored on Smith's attempt to put him out at third. In the sixth inning, Yale tied the score on Sankey's fumble of Letton's easy bounder. Letton stole second, and went to third on DeSaulles' base hit. Both men scored when Smith knocked a two-base hit over Altman's head. Neither team scored in the seventh, but in the eighth, Yale made five runs. DeSaulles knocked a hot liner to Gunster, who fumbled, DeSaulles went to third base on a wild pitch, and scored on Smith's two-base hit. Then Jerrens and Trudeau struck out. Murphy knocked a single base hit to right field, and Smith scored. Keator got his base on balls, and Quinby made a safe hit. Then both scored on Greenway's great hit to the fence; Titus got his hands on the ball, but dropped it. Princeton scored one run in her half. Easton went to first base on Smith's error, and scored on Quinby's fumble and bad throw of Gunster's hit.

The Harvard game of June 18 was another ten inning game in which Princeton won. Paine opened the game by sending Bradley to first on balls, and followed this up by giving Easton his base on a miserable throw. Both runners were advanced a base on infield outs, and a passed ball sent them over the plate with two runs. Harvard managed to get one run in her half. Dean went to first on balls, stole second, and scored on Clarkson's single hit to right field. Neither team came near scoring again until the sixth inning, when Harvard got her second and last run. Scannell opened the inning with a two-base hit to right field, that Altman should have caught. Burgess made a sacrifice hit, and Scannell scored on Clarkson's safe hit to right field. Haughton sent Clarkson to third on a single hit to centre field, but Rand and Stevenson were put out easily. The score was a tie, 2-2, and the excitement was at fever heat from this time on. But there was no further scoring until the tenth inning. Kelly was the first man at the bat, and went out on a grounder to Haughton. Titus hit safely to right field, Altman went out on a fly to Rand. It was here, with two men out, that Princeton had good luck. Wilson hit a bounding ball past Paine. It hit Umpire O'Rourke in the small of the back, and bounded away. It would have been an easy "out" if it had not struck the umpire, and as it was, Chandler made a clever stop, and forced out Titus at second. But, because the ball hit the umpire, it was declared a safe hit, and Titus declared not out. A wild pitch advanced the runners a base, and then Smith hit safely to left centre, sending them both in. During the game, Princeton made only one error, quite her best record of the season.

Umpire, Mr. Tim Keefe.

Princeton won the fifth and deciding game from Yale on the 23d of June. It took eleven innings to decide the game, and two men were out when the winning run was made. Both teams had a great many chances to win the game, but each time the necessary hit was not forthcoming. The feature of the game was the work of the batteries. Yale began scoring in the opening inning. Keator got a base on balls, went to second on DeSaulles' sacrifice, and came home on Greenway's single, the latter getting to second on the "throw-in." He scored on Letton's single hit. Yale did not score again until the seventh inning, when Trudeau made a three-base hit to left centre field. He came in on Bartlett's fly to Altman. No more runs were scored by Yale, although Bartlett got as far as third base in the ninth. In the eleventh, Trudeau made another three-base hit, but Yale's batters could not bring him home. Bradley, for Princeton, got as far as third with Kelly on first. As Kelly started to steal second, he was caught between DeSaulles and Letton; while they were running him down, by a lightning-like throw across the diamond, Letton caught Bradley far enough off the third base for Smith to put him out, while Kelly was kept at first. This magnificent play was, of course, loudly applauded. Princeton's first score was in the third inning. Bradley beat the ball to first. Easton and Kelly hit safely, and Bradley scored. Easton scored on Titus' sacrifice. The score stood a tie until the sixth inning when Smith got to first on Bartlett's error, went to second on Gunster's sacrifice, and came in on a safe hit of Bradley's which Smith could not handle. Several Princeton men got to first in the following innings, but most of them were caught by Murphy in trying to steal second. In the eleventh inning, after one man was out, Ward got a base on balls. Bradley struck out. Easton then got a base on balls, and Kelly hit safely to short left field, which brought Ward in for the winning run. The game was loosely played, abounding in errors, and wound up a season that had been notable in the two particulars of errors and slovenly play. It likewise again demonstrated that Princeton eagerness to knock the ball out of its cover, and the inability either to get it over the heads of the deep fielders, or to place it with some value to the runner. That Princeton won was due to Yale's errors, of which they made five. Yale's best part in the day was the sportsmanly spirit which cheered Princeton's good plays when the game was a tie, and refrained at all times from attempts to rattle the pitcher. To have cheered a rival when a championship hung in the balance was the most glorious of victories.

This was the first time that Princeton had won the Yale Commencement game, and the first time Princeton ever defeated Yale on her own grounds. Jerome Bradley, '97, Captain the '96 team, writes: "the real cause for our victories that year and since then in baseball is due to the fact that each man is made to have absolute confidence in his team-mates, which in time leads up to the closest friendship. With this object in view we often had 'stars' warming the bench, while the more spirited and harder worker was filling his position. Disorganizers were immediately put off the grounds."

After nineteen practice games Princeton met and defeated Harvard on May 15. The two teams were evenly matched in all respects except batting, and Princeton's ability to hit the ball won the day. The game was interesting and well contested until the ninth inning when the Princeton infield took a slump and made misplays that accounted for at least two of Harvard's runs. Bradley made Princeton's first run. A base on balls, Paine's error and a sacrifice hit advanced him to third, from which he stole home on Butler's sacrifice fly to Beale. Princeton scored again in the fourth inning by bunching her hits. In the fifth inning Paine weakened slightly and Princeton bunched her hits which, with errors by Paine and Stevenson and two bases on balls, netted Princeton four runs. In the eighth inning with Dean on first and two out, Altman's wonderful catch of Chandler's long hit shut Harvard out of two runs. Paine, the first man up for Harvard in the ninth, got a hit. Rand hit a hot "liner" to Butler and it looked like a double play but Smith dropped the throw and both men were safe. Then Princeton went to pieces. Haughton hit safely, and with the bases full Wilson struck out Beale, Scannell hit to Butler and there was another chance for a double play, but this time Butler threw wild, and both Paine and Rand crossed the plate. Stevenson forced Scannell at second, but Kafer let the next ball go by and Haughton scored. Wilson hit Burgess, and with two on bases Dean received the chance of his life. He hit a hot liner out close to second and Smith got it and threw him out at first thus ending the game. The game was remarkable for the plucky uphill play of the Harvard nine in the last inning with the score 6-0 in Princeton's favor; the visitors went to the bat, but only for Smith's pretty stop of Bean's line hit they might have tied the score and even won the game. Wilson pitched "pretty ball" throughout. Up to the ninth inning not a Harvard batsman reached third base and only two hits were made off Wilson's delivery.

Harvard won the second game from Princeton on May 29, at Cambridge. The victory was won chiefly by Harvard's pitcher. At times Princeton played poorly in the field. As far as hitting was concerned the honors were even and if Princeton's errors had not come at the wrong time, she would have won her expected victory. Princeton started in the game with a rush but could not score, although Wilson reached third base in the first inning and Kafer got that far in the second. In the third inning Harvard scored one run, and this lead was never lost. An error by Butler, Paine's out and Rand's hit brought Chandler across the plate. In the fifth, Harvard hit Wilson three times, two of them two base hits. This with a base on balls and a bad error by Butler gave Harvard four runs and the game. Altman's beautiful throw to the plate cut off another run. Princeton made a heavy spurt in the sixth and seventh, but Harvard increased her lead in the eight by two runs, made mostly by the loose playing of Princeton.

The third and deciding game played on June 1, at New Haven, and Princeton won by the exciting score of 2-0. Again, it was largely a pitcher's battle, in which Paine, for most of the time, had Princeton at his mercy but his own wildness, nevertheless, gave Princeton her runs; a wild pitch in each case contributing directly to the result. Bradley, the first man at the bat, took a base on balls and trotted to second as Stevenson threw Easton out at first on a bouncer. Altman was put out on a fly to Beale and it looked as if Princeton would be blanked. But a shower just before the game had made the ground wet and Paine temporarily lost control of the ball. He made a wild pitch and while Scannell was chasing the ball over by the Princeton players' bench, Bradley scampered home. Princeton's other run was made in the sixth inning. With one man out Kelly made a single hit and on Beale's juggling the ball, went on to second. Paine's wild pitch sent him to third and Kafer's safe hit brought him home. Kelly batting hard, making three single hits and Kafer and Haughton each made a three base hit. Haughton's was one of the longest hits ever made on the grounds and would have been a home run but the ball was handled perfectly by Princeton's outfield. Jayne was hit hard but Princeton's phenomenal running catches and his own fielding of hot grounders prevented Harvard from scoring. Harvard had no chance to score except in the sixth inning when Haughton opened the inning with his three base hit. A sacrifice hit was expected as Harvard's heavy hitters followed but the next three men went out in order, two on assists by Jayne.

Yale won the game of June 5, in the tenth inning. Tied in the ninth by Camp's home run after two men were out, won in the tenth by Letton's home run after two men were out and two strikes had been called—such is the brief history of this game. From the moment that Bradley stepped to the plate and knocked a three base hit until the end of the tenth inning when Letton made his second home run, and drove the ball so deep into left field that it was almost lost amongst the crowd, men's hearts were in their throats and they were fairly carried off their feet with excitement. Men danced and shrieked, jumped on their seats and waved hats, hands, and chairs, or hugged one another and wept for joy when Camp's splendid batting saved the game. But all the wonderful playing was not on Yale's side. Notwithstanding the victory for Yale, Jerome Bradley undoubtedly played the star game of the day making two running catches in deep centre field, which, had they been missed, would in all probability have given Yale two more home runs; and moreover he had a batting record of one three base hit, one two base hit, one single hit, with two bases on balls out of six times at the bat. Considering the game from the beginning to the end Princeton played a better fielding game than Yale, but although Princeton had a splendid batting record, Yale had a better. Bradley was first to bat for Princeton and knocked the third ball pitched between left and centre field for a three base hit. Easton followed, with a fly over first base, which no one could get and Bradley scored. Kafer bunted and forced Easton out at second base. For Yale, Keator made a two base hit and was advanced to third base on Farnham's sacrifice hit. Letton knocked a home run over Altman's head. Greenway batted a liner through Wilson and reached first. Fincke followed with a neat single and stole second base. Greenway went to third base and at this point Wilson retired from the box and was succeeded by Jayne who gave Camp his base on balls, thus filling the bases. Hazen, the next batter, knocked a hard single hit on which Fincke and Greenway scored, but Wallace was put out at third and retired the side. In the second inning another run was added to Yale's score by Murphy's single, Keator's bunt and Farnham's hit. Neither Princeton nor Yale scored again until the fifth inning, when Bradley received his base on balls, stole second, got third on Easton's sacrifice hit and scored on Kafer's hit. Kafer got to second base on Kelly's hit, third on Smith's sacrifice and scored on Altman's two base hit. Yale secured two runs in her half through Camp's two base hit, Wallace's safe hit, followed by Jayne's wild throw to second base and Hazen's pretty two base hit. In the sixth inning Princeton scored on a scratch hit by Bradley and a poor throw by Letton. In the seventh Kelly scored for Princeton on two errors by Yale and a single hit by Altman. Again in the eighth Princeton scored on a single hit by Jayne, an error by Keator and Easton's three base hit. Then came the exciting ninth. Smith made a clean hit and stole second. Altman struck out. Butler hit a long fly to Wallace which he muffed after an excellent attempt. Smith scored and Butler reached third. Greenway then sent Hillebrand to first on balls and Jayne struck out. Both Bradley and Easton were sent to first on balls and Butler forced in. For Yale, Letton and Greenway went out quickly on fine plays by Hillebrand and with the score 9-7 in Princeton's favor it seemed as if it was all over with Yale. But Fincke proved a good waiter and got his base on balls. Then Freshman Camp came up and after knocking countless fouls, sent a home run between centre and left field and got home just in time to tie the score. Kelly started the tenth inning for Princeton with a clean single hit, but Smith hit to Fincke who caught Kelly at second, Hazen completing a pretty double play by getting the ball to first in time to catch

Smith. Altman received his base on balls but was left on first when Butler went out on a fly to Fincke. Hazen was Yale's first batter. He had been playing a beautiful game all the way through and kept up his good work by knocking out a single hit. Murphy tried to bunt the ball on a third strike but made a foul and was out. Keator then hit to Kelly who missed it and Hazen went to second. Farnham made the Yale audience groan by striking out. Letton the next batter struck at the ball twice; the third time he hit it fairly and placed it almost where Camp had in the preceding inning. Bradley made a desperate attempt to reach it but it went far beyond him for a home run and Yale had won the game.

The second Yale game, at Princeton, was won by Princeton on June 12. Bradley, the first man at the bat, was given his base on balls and Easton made a safe hit. Kafer followed with a safe hit that allowed Bradley and Easton to score. Kelly and Smith were given first on balls and scored on Butler's single hit. Yale scored her first run in the second inning when Fincke made a safe hit, Camp made a sacrifice hit and Hazen's single hit advanced him to third. Goodwin knocked another sacrifice hit and Fincke scored. An error by Wilson and Keator's safe hit scored Hazen. In the third inning Smith scored again for Princeton on a passed ball, Altman's sacrifice and Butler's safe hit. In the fifth inning came the slump of the day. Bradley was hit by Hamlin and took his first base. Easton and Kafer both made single hits; Smith knocked a two base hit and Altman followed with a three base hit clearing the bases, but he tried to make it a home run and was put out at the plate. But the honor of a home run belonged to Butler the next man. Yale made a single run in the fourth and both sides failed to score in the fifth and sixth. Feary's wild pitches gave Princeton another run in the seventh and then Yale went in to bat out a victory. Letton made a home run and Greenway a safe hit, Fincke made a three base hit and Jayne, who had been in the Infirmary very recently, retired from the box and Altman took his place. Camp struck out. Hazen knocked an easy grounder to Kelly who threw Fincke out at home and after Goodwin had reached first on a safe hit, Feary struck out and Yale's four hits had only yielded two runs. Single hits by Smith and Butler added another run to Princeton's score in the eighth. Yale showed that she was still in the game by scoring three runs, on Keator's single hit, Wilson's two errors, Greenway's three base hit and a couple of passed balls. But in the ninth inning Smith settled all possible doubts of Princeton's victory by knocking a home run to left field when the bases were full.

In the deciding game in New York, Princeton defeated Yale and won the championship again. After the second inning Yale was completely at Princeton's mercy, for her fielders played raggedly and stopped and threw the ball as though it was a practice game early in the season. It was at the bat that Princeton showed up strongest. They bunched their hits while Yale piled up errors by fumbling the ball and throwing it around the diamond in a fashion calculated to make their friends despair. In the fifth inning Feary was replaced by Hecker who did fairly well, allowing only two men to cross the plate in the next four innings, but Princeton had already won the game. Bradley opened the game by knocking a high fly which Wallace easily caught. Easton was hit by a pitched ball and took second on a wild throw by Feary. After Kafer had struck out, a hit to short stop which was fumbled, a wild throw over Letton's head by Fincke and a poor throw to third by Goodwin, followed by a base on balls and two base hits, gave Princeton four runs. After two men had struck out, Yale made two runs in this inning by a base on balls, Kelly's fumble of Hazen's grounder and base hits by Fincke and Camp. Yale played wretchedly in the third inning and Princeton scored seven runs. Kelly again knocked a high fly which Keator caught. Smith got his base on balls. Altman knocked a bounder to Feary but he fumbled the ball and made a wild pitch, allowing the runners to move up a base. Butler was sent to first on balls and the bases were filled. Altman and Smith came home on Hillebrand's hit past Fincke, and Goodwin's error. Jayne hit for a base and two more men scored on errors by Greenway and Fincke. Bradley got to first on balls, Easton went out from short stop to first, but on the play Jayne scored. A single hit by Kafer over second sent Bradley home and a moment later Kafer scored on Kelly's hit to right field. There was a sigh of relief from the Yale men when Smith hit a fly which Greenway easily caught retiring the side. In Yale's half of this inning Keator drove a pretty double to centre field and ran home on Greenway's hit to short stop and an error by Butler. Princeton had another batting attack in the fifth inning and scored six more runs, with the aid of glaring errors by Yale. Kelly started the scoring, after Easton had been caught napping on first. He got his base on balls, stole second and was forced to third when bases on balls were given to Smith and Altman. With the bases full, Butler waited for four balls, and forced in Kelly. Hillebrand knocked a single hit, which allowed Smith and Altman to score. Butler stole second and on a hit to left field by Jayne, he scored. Feary was then taken out of the box and Hecker took his place. He began by hitting Bradley and filling the bases. Easton, the second batsman to face him, knocked two base hit to centre field, scoring Hillebrand and Jayne. Yale steadied down after the fifth inning and only two runs more were scored.

Championship won by Princeton.

The most interesting of the early practice games in 1898, was the Columbia game on April 23. Columbia took the lead at the start when she made seven runs in the first two innings. Princeton played a splendid uphill game and by making one run in the second, four in the fourth and one in the sixth inning, tied the game with another run in the seventh inning. In the ninth inning Easton was coaching on the lines and the umpire ordered him off. Some hot words passed and the umpire said Easton could not play. Princeton refused to put in a substitute and the game was declared forfeited to Columbia.

Princeton defeated Cornell in a closely contested game on April 30, by a score of 3-0. The game was a pitcher's battle throughout and Hillebrand proved himself superior to Bole, only allowing two safe hits to Cornell. Bole however was very effective, except in the third inning when a base on balls, Easton's being hit by a pitched ball, and safe hits by Kelly and Kafer brought in three runs. In the second inning safe hits by Miller and Bole and an error by Hillebrand enabled Cornell to get three men on bases, but Stratton's easy fly to Kelly retired the side. After the fourth inning neither side was successful in getting a man to third base.

Stolen Bases, Butler 3, Easton, Burke, Hutchings 2. 2 Base Hits, Kafer, Hutchings, Cozzens. 3 Base Hits, Kelly, Haughton. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 5, Fitz B. Morse 1. Bases on Balls, by Hillebrand 2, Morse 2, Fitz 5. Passed Balls, Reid 2. Time, 2 hours and 25 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Anderson.

It was predicted that the first Harvard game on May 14, would be a closely fought contest, but Princeton won in the first inning, scoring six runs. Princeton went to the bat first and Suter immediately got his base on balls. Two errors, another base on balls, and five hits gave Princeton six runs before the first inning ended. Harvard secured one run in this inning when Laughlin reached first on Hutchings' error, and another in the fourth inning, but at other times the Harvard men were retired in one, two, three order. After the first inning Fitz settled down and pitched good ball, although his support was wretched. Harvard's players made a number of very careless plays; Butler stole home once while the first baseman hugged the ball to hold a runner on first. Princeton made only two errors, both on muffed flies and only one proved costly.

Stolen Bases, Bray. 2 Base Hits, Hillebrand, Worthington 2. 3 Base Hits, Walbridge. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 3, Nevins 2, Harrison 1. Bases on Balls, by Hillebrand 3, Harrison 1, Nevins 1. Passed Balls, Kafer 1. Time, 1 hour and 35 minutes. Umpire, Mr. March.

On May 18, Lafayette scored seven runs in the first two innings when four men were sent to first, two on balls, and two were hit by pitched ball. Before the second inning closed Walbridge made a three base hit that brought in three runners. Princeton opened her game with two singles, which, followed by Lafayette's only error and two sacrifice hits, brought in three runs. But after this, Princeton could not make a single base hit off Nevins and Lafayette won by the score of 7-3.

Stolen Bases, Butler, Watkins, Robinson. 2 Base Hits, Kafer. 3 Base Hits, Butler. Double Play, Hillebrand, Kafer and Kelly. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 3, McCormick 2, Cozzens 2. Bases on Balls, by Hillebrand 4, McCormick 3, Cozzens 1. Time, 2 hours and 20 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Murray.

In the first inning of the Harvard game, on March 28, Suter struck out, Easton singled, but was caught napping at first. Kafer put up a short fly just behind shortstop which Captain Rand neatly captured after slipping to the ground. The first three Harvard men went out on easy chances. Kelly opened the second inning with a single hit, but was, like Easton, caught napping off first base. The other Princeton batters went out in order. In the third inning McCormick, the Harvard pitcher, went to pieces completely. Watkins went out at first. Then Burke made a single hit and this seemed to make McCormick lose all control of himself; Suter and Easton were sent to bases on balls. Kafer made a single hit, that brought Burke and Suter home. Then Kelly knocked a three base hit, bringing Easton home, but he himself was declared out for failing to touch second base. In the fourth inning Hillebrand struck out, Watkins gained first on Laughlin's wild throw and Burke made a single hit, but he was forced out at second by Suter's hit to short stop. Then McCormick gave Easton his base on balls and the bases were full. But immediately all three scored on Kafer's two base hit to left field. Harvard now changed pitchers and during the remaining five innings Cossens allowed Princeton only four scattered hits. In the seventh inning Princeton scored two runs. Suter got a base on balls and reached second on Laughlin's error. The latter threw Kafer out at first, but fumbled an easy grounder of Kelly's. Butler put up a high fly which Lynch lost in the sun. Both runners scored and Butler reached third. Harvard got men on third and second in her half. Then with one man out Hillebrand struck out the next two batters and retired the side. Harvard's runs were made in the eighth inning as a result of an error by Kelly, bases on balls to Laughlin and Haughton and Reid's single.

Bases on Balls, by Hillebrand 6, Feary 11, Greenway 3. Hit by Pitched Ball, Easton, Hutchings. Passed Balls, Kafer, Sullivan 3. Time, 2 hours and 25 minutes. Umpir, Mr. Henderson.

Princeton won the first Yale game at New Haven, on June 4, because of Yale's weak pitcher. In the first four innings Feary gave eleven men their bases on balls; and the first run was forced in by bases on balls. The game was played in a cold, piercing northeast wind, that made the spectators shiver and sent the sand and dust of the diamond, hurling into the eyes of the players. It was a poor day for baseball and a worse one for Yale. Captain Greenway's men could neither bat, field, nor run bases. In the second inning Kelly hit for three bases and sent Burke, Watkins and Easton across the home plate. In the fourth inning Kafer led off with a home run and Kelly took first on Wallace's error. Two bases on balls and two single hits followed, sending in five runs. At the beginning of the fifth inning, Captain Greenway who had not pitched since 1897, went into the box and held the Princeton hits down fairly well, though in this inning Princeton secured two more runs on four consecutive single hits by Hutchings, Burke, Hillebrand and Watkins. Princeton's last run was made in the eighth inning. Easton was hit, took second on Kafer's out at first and scored on Kelly's third hit. Princeton had made eleven runs before Yale scored. Then in the seventh inning Wear knocked a home run. In the eighth inning Yale, with two men out, scored six runs. DeSaulles with bases full, made a scratch hit and brought home Camp. Wadsworth made the next hit and Hazen scored. Wear got his base on balls, forcing Sullivan home and then Captain Greenway drove a three base hit to left field. The game closed with the score of 12-7 in Princeton's favor.

Stolen Bases, Hutchings, Easton, Burke, Wallace. 3 Base Hits, Kafer, Greenway, Eddy. Double Play, Burke-Kelly. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 2, Greenway 3. Bases on Balls, Hillebrand 6, Greenway 3. Hit by Pitched Ball, Sullivan. Passed Balls, Sullivan. Time, 2 hours and 40 minutes. Umpire, Mr. W. W. Smith.

Yale won the second game on June 11 at Princeton through Greenway's effective pitching. Suter and Easton went out on flies, then Kafer hit a pretty three base hit, but he was left there as Kelly went out on a fly to Eddy. Then Wear made a single hit for Yale, and Greenway reached first on Hutchings' error. Wallace got his base on balls and with three men on bases Camp knocked out what looked like a two base hit. Watkins after a hard run, managed to catch it. In the second inning no one scored, but the next inning brought the excitement.

Princeton scored two runs on errors by DeSaulles and Hazen. For Yale, Wadsworth was thrown out at first by Butler. Burke's wild throw placed Wear on third base and Greenway's long drive for three bases sent him home. Wallace's hit scored Greenway but Camp again forced Wallace. Bases on balls to Hazen, Eddy and Sullivan forced in the third run and then Hillebrand settled down and struck out DeSaulles. In the fifth inning Princeton gained but immediately lost the lead and likewise in the sixth. But in the seventh inning Princeton failed to score while Yale added another run. In the ninth inning Princeton made a desperate but futile attempt to pull the game out. Suter made a single, Easton a sacrifice, but Kafer struck out. Then Kelly came up but he could only hit an easy grounder to Hazen who threw him out at first.

Earned Runs, Y. 2. Stolen Bases, Burke, Hutchings, DeSaulles. Left on Bases, P. 0, Y. 3. 3 Base Hits, Wear. Double Play, Burke-Kelly. Sacrifice Hit, Hazen. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 7, Greenway, 4. Wild Pitch, Greenway. Passed Balls, Kafer. Time, 2 hours and 20 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Gaffney.

The third Yale game in New York on June 18, was won by Yale. Suter led off with a hit and went to second on Greenway's wild pitch. He stood there, however, while the next two men struck out and Wear caught the third out. Yale got a start in her half when DeSaulles was hit on the foot, stole second and scored when Hutchings fumbled Greenway's grounder. In the second inning Princeton tied the score, after DeSaulles had made a wonderful stop and throw of Butler's liner close to first base. Hutchings knocked out a single and went to third when Sullivan threw the ball into centre field in trying to catch the runner at second. Hillebrand hit a sharp liner to Camp and the latter threw home in good style but Hutchings slid under and was safe. Neither team scored in the next inning and in the fourth it looked as if Princeton was going to win. Butler and Burke scored on a combination of a base on balls, a sacrifice hit by Hillebrand, and singles by Burke and Watkins. In Yale's half, Suter missed Wear's three base hit after a hard try and Wear scored a moment later when Hillebrand failed to handle Greenway's high bunt. Camp advanced Greenway to second by getting in the way of a pitched ball and Greenway scored when Hutchinson fumbled Hazen's sharp grounder. This tied the score but Princeton made no more runs, while Yale made three on single hits by Greenway, Wallace, Camp and Hazen. Yale completed her score in the sixth inning by two runs when DeSaulles went to first on balls, Burke fumbled twice and Greenway made a single hit.

Yale won the championship.

The first exciting game of the season was the Lafayette game on April 19. Both teams scored one run in the first inning, and the game remained a tie until the end of the eighth inning. It was a pitchers' battle in which Nevins had a slight advantage. Until the eighth inning Princeton had been able to make only two hits and it looked as if Lafayette would win out since they were playing the steadier game at the bat and in the field. But they were unable to run bases and nine men were left on bases. The game turned at the eighth inning when Hutchings' single hit was followed by Kafer's. A double steal was then made and both men scored on Harrison's two base hit to deep right field.

The defeat by Lehigh on April 26, was a great surprise. Princeton began the game well with bunting three hits that netted two runs. Lehigh played with snap and vim throughout the entire game and used every weakness of Princeton who went into the game as to a practice game. Lehigh made three runs in the third and tied the score, but Princeton gained a lead of one in the fourth inning. In the seventh Lehigh tied this score and in the eighth good batting yielded them the winning run.

Stolen Bases, Suter 2, Harrison. Left on Bases, P. 9, C. 6. 2 Base Hits Kafer, McGibbon. Sacrifice Hits, Bedford, Genger, Miller. Double Play, Hutchings, Hillebrand and Bedford, Stratton, Dougherty and Young. 1st Base on Errors, P. 3, C. 3. Struck Out, by Hillebrand 6, Young 4. Bases on Balls, by Hillebrand 2, Young 5. Hit by Pitched Ball, Stratton, Newton. Passed Balls, Genger 3. Time, 1 hour and 45 minutes. Umpire Mr. Davis.

In the Cornell game on April 29, Suter took first on balls. He reached second on an error, went to third on a passed ball and scored on a daring slide to the home plate on a ball hit to second base. Princeton scored again in the second inning. Watkins reached first on balls, went to second on a passed ball and came home on McGibbon's two base hit. McGibbon scored the last run of the game on a wild throw to first base. Cornell failed to hit safely until the sixth inning when Young hit to Bedford who made a wonderful stop, but the runner reached first before the ball could be fielded. However the next two men struck out. Hillebrand allowed only two hits and only one ball reached the outfield. Princeton won the game through Hillebrand's control of the ball, aided by the really brilliant work of the second baseman and excellent fielding by the team generally. Her one run in the first inning Princeton earned, but the other two in the second came through gifts of first base and errors. Thereafter Cornell's pitcher steadied. And for the remaining six innings better ball has seldom been played by college nines in April.

BASEBALL CAPTAINS—1896-1901.

For five innings the Harvard game on May 13, was fairly, cleanly played and evenly contested, so much so as to lend unusual interest to a game thus early in the season. Neither side scored until the fourth inning when each made a single run—Princeton through Hillebrand's three bagger and Reia's wild throw to second, and Harvard through Hutching's miss of Reia's grounder and Bedford's bad throw to the plate. But the sixth inning brought disaster to Harvard and was the beginning of Princeton's run getting. Chapman led off with a single and thereupon Morse presented three men in succession with first base, thus forcing in a run. With only one out and the bases filled Suter made a beautiful long hit into right field for a home run and the inning closed with the score 6-1 in Princeton's favor. In the eighth inning Suter made a three base hit, Kafer was sent to first on balls and Suter scored on Fincke's slow work. Dibblee muffed Harrison's low line drive and Kafer scored. Then Hutching's knocked out a two base hit that brought Hillebrand and Harrison home.

The first game with Brown on May 6, had been easily won by Princeton with the score 8-2, and Princeton expected an easy game on May 17. But Brown won by the score of 6-3. Brown made her first run in the second inning on a single and a three base hit. In the third inning two single hits followed by another three base hit by Paine sent in two runs. Two more singles increased the score to four. The last two runs for Brown were scored in the ninth inning by good batting and Princeton errors. Princeton scored all three runs in the third inning. Two men were out with the bases filled when Hutchinson drove a high fly to Richardson in left field. The ball bounded through his hands and let in three runs.

Princeton was defeated by Cornell on May 20, by the score of 7-5. All of Cornell's runs were made in the fourth inning when Hillebrand allowed six hits. Princeton scored her first run in the second inning when Stratton's error gave Watkins his first. He reached second in safety for the baseman muffed the catcher's throw. Later he went to third on a "fielder's choice" and scored on a passed ball. In the third inning the second Princeton run was scored on hits by Bedford and Kafer. The fourth inning opened with singles by Murtaugh and Young. Then Newton made a sacrifice hit and filled the bases. Hillebrand tried to steady down but forced a run by sending Robertson to first on balls. Newton went out on an infield fly, but a single hit by Genger and a two bagger from Brown cleared the bases and Genger was on third. Both he and Brown scored on Miller's single hit. For the remaining innings Hillebrand was himself again and allowed no Cornell man to reach first base. In the ninth Harrison was given first base on Stratton's wild throw. A sacrifice hit by Watkins pushed the runner to second. Young put out the next two men on pop flies, but Hutchings was hit by a pitched ball and went to first. Then singles by Bedford and Chapman scored the runners and the game closed with the score 7-5 in favor of Cornell.

On May 27, Harvard lost the second and last of her Princeton baseball series in a game notable for slovenly work, even among the considerable list of poorly played games of the season. Princeton did not have to play very hard to win—it was only necessary to let her opponents beat themselves. In point of fact Princeton performed indifferently, piling up four errors, of which Hutchings contributed the lion's share. After the second inning when Princeton made three runs, there was never a doubt as to the eventual outcome, though Harvard in the sixth gave her only exhibition of sharp play by cutting off two men at the plate. Princeton practically won the game in the second inning, when hits by Harrison and Hillebrand which Lynch and Laughlin let go through their legs, and errors by Clark, a single by Hutchinson and an error by Fits produced three runs. Again in the fourth Princeton scored four runs on Watkin's slow grounder to Galbraith, a base on balls, Green's hit and Suter's home run. In the eighth inning, Suter's two base hit and Kafer's single tallied again and Clark's second error, singles by Suter, Kafer, a hit by pitcher and Hillebrand's hit to left gave Princeton the last four runs.

For the third time this year the strong Georgetown University team defeated Princeton, on May 29, the score being 3-0. It was a pitcher's struggle throughout and was characterized by steady playing, rather than by any phenomenal work. Princeton made only two hits off Bach's delivery. Two of Georgetown's runs were made by Moran and Fleming in the fifth inning on a scratch hit and errors, while the third run was made in the eighth by Cranston on a scratch hit and sharp base running.

Yale won the first game with Princeton at New Haven, on June 3. Princeton did not get a man to first base until Camp's error in the fifth inning gave Watkin's life he had not earned and in the nine innings only four Princeton men reached first base and two of these got as far as second. Yale's pitcher, Robertson, struck out no more than two men but he disclosed control of the ball not excelled this season by an amateur; on the other hand Hillebrand who struck out four men, had frequently occurring periods when he appeared to have no control whatever of the ball; he presented ten men with first base, six on balls and four he hit, made two wild pitches that resulted in a run and allowed nine hits one a three bagger. Yale scored two runs in the second inning; Wallace and Camp each made a hit and Camp stole second, Sullivan was hit by the pitcher and the bases were filled. Waddell proved equal to the occasion and lined out a pretty hit into left field, on which two men scored. Then Eddy struck out, Robertson was out at first, DeSaulles got first on balls and Quinby struck out. Yale added one more run in the third inning. Wear, the first man up, made a hit, Wallace got his base on balls and each advanced a base on a passed ball. Camp struck out, and Wear scored on a passed ball. Sullivan was out at first and Waddell struck out. It was then thought that Princeton had a fighting chance and the small contingent which supported the orange and black cheered lustily. The side retired, however, in one, two, three order. Princeton's real "Waterloo" came in the fifth inning, when Yale scored three runs. Wallace went out at first, Camp reached first on balls, Sullivan made a safety and Waddell was hit by the pitcher. Camp scored on Eddy's out (short stop to first base.) Robertson also was hit by a pitched ball. Two more runs were scored on DeSaulles' single who went out a minute later at second on Quinby's grounder. Yale was blanked in the next three innings, but scored two more in the ninth. Wallace was sent to first on four balls and Camp went out on an easy fly ball to Hutchinson. Then Sullivan sent a pretty liner between left and centre fields. He got to third on the hit and Wallace came in. Waddell lifted a high fly into centre which was caught, but Sullivan scored the eighth run. Eddy went out, second to first. The only time Princeton came near scoring was in the sixth inning when two men were out. Kafer lined out a hit which seemed good for three bases. It looked as if it were going ten feet over Wear's head in centre field, but he made a grand run, jumped into the air and caught the ball.

In this second Yale game on June 10, Yale's pitcher, Robertson, had his turn at losing control of the ball, and though the lapse was brief, it none the less largely aided Princeton to win the second game. Only one man had reached third at the end of six innings and both pitchers were highly effective and well supported. In the seventh however, with one man out, Sullivan made a three bagger, which, followed by Waddell's grounder fielded to first and muffed by Green, and Eddy being hit, filled the bases. Hillebrand was equal to the emergency and struck out Robertson; but DeSaulles rapped a sharp one to Hutchinson, who, instead of touching third, threw to first, and Green, standing in the runner's way was run into and both Sullivan and Waddell scored. Only one hit had been made off Robertson but in the seventh inning, Hutchinson, the first man up, knocked a single to left. McGibbon sent him to second on a sacrifice hit and Hutchinson scored on Watkin's hit over second. Suter got his second hit and the bases were all occupied when Robertson hit Kafer. Yale's pitcher was deeply in trouble, for a minute afterwards he forced in the second run by hitting Harrison; then Hillebrand got a single hit over Quinby's head and Suter and Kafer crossed the plate. Princeton clinched the victory in the eighth inning with two more runs on an error by Robertson, a single by Hutchinson and Kafer's driving three base hit out to the running track.

Princeton defeated Yale in New York on June 17, in the final game of their series, by a margin so wide that there was no questioning the final award of honors in the college baseball season. Yale was fairly beaten by a nine that outplayed her at all points of the game. Princeton's work was clean and snappy in the field, fast and well judged on the bases, hard and timely at the bat. To be sure Yale's three errors and some very poor base running contributed to Princeton's run-getting, but the real explanation is furnished by the ineffectiveness of both Yale's pitchers, whom Princeton batted where and when she pleased. In the first inning Yale was put out in one, two, three order, and Suter the first man up for Princeton was retired on a high fly to Wallace. Then Cook sent Kafer to first on balls and followed this by hitting Harrison. Hillebrand got his first hit on an infield bunt, and Kafer scored on Bedford's long foul fly to right, which was caught by Wallace. Yale began well in the second inning with three singles in succession, but with the bases full Hillebrand was equal to the occasion and brought the crowd to its feet by striking out the next three batters, Waddell, Eddy and Cook, on ten pitched balls. Princeton got a run in the second inning on a base on balls to McGibbon who stole second, and a driving single to left by Suter. Princeton scored again in the third inning on DeSaulles' error and a hit by Bedford. Yale got her first run in the third inning. DeSaulles led off with a grounder to Bedford who gave him life by fumbling. He immediately started for second and got there on a close decision, and tallied on a pretty hit by Wear just over third base. Yale had a chance to tie the score but the reckless base running of Wear, who was caught sprinting for third by Kafer's throw and another idiotic attempt on the part of Wallace to get to third on Camp's short hit to left, retired the side. In the fourth inning Cook had another bad attack of the "rattles" and this time the rest of the team showed the same symptoms. A base on balls, a hit by pitcher, Camp's error, Sullivan's passed ball and Hillebrand's hit gave Princeton three more runs. In the next inning Robertson took Cook's place. The lengthy Sophomore lasted for one inning, during which things looked as if Yale still had a chance, but by the sixth inning the Tigers had sized him up. Watkins smashed the first ball pitched past Quinby. Suter followed with another one like it between first and second, and Kafer filled the bases by beating out his bunt to Quinby. Harrison made a mighty effort but his best was a drop fly to Quinby. Then came Hillebrand's third hit, which sent Watkins and Kafer across the plate. Robertson straightened out long enough to strike Bedford out, but after he had fooled Green, the next batter, with two easy drops the Princeton first baseman caught one on the end of his bat and the ball sailed out into the left field stand for a home run. It struck close to the chalk line and Captain DeSaulles said it was a foul but Umpire Carpenter thought not, and Green ran around the bases with the first home run Princeton scored in this season's Yale games. Yale made a hopeless rally in the seventh inning. Hits by Robertson and Cook, an error by Harrison and Quinby's long fly to centre counted two runs. In the ninth inning Yale made another run. Two singles by Robertson and DeSaulles gave Yale its fourth run but Kafer caught DeSaulles stealing second, and the next two men were retired on flies.

On May 5, Princeton was defeated by Brown by the score 6-1. The victory was due to Washburn's pitching. Princeton's one run was made in the second inning when Pearson, after a three base hit, reached home on an error by Whittemore. The game was really won in the third inning when hits by Washburn and Tobey and a bunt by Bacon filled the bases. Then Clark, by a grounder, forced Washburn out at the home plate and Barry did the same to Tobey. With two men out, Detmars hit to left field and three runs were scored.

The first Harvard game on May 26, was a splendid contest, resulting in the score of 4-0 in favor of Harvard. The Princeton batters could not hit Stillman. Princeton made four hits and Harvard three, but Captain Reid's home run made the Harvard total base hits six to Princeton's four. Steinwender made the only error for Princeton and Coolidge the two for Harvard, but neither affected the score. Stillman struck out ten men to Hillebrand's six and gave but one man his base on balls and hit one man to Hillebrand's two bases on balls and two men hit. Harvard scored in the first inning and clinched the game in the eighth, when Hillebrand lost control of the ball for a short time and hit Laughlin and Kendall in succession. Then Reid brought them in with a home run, knocked over Watkin's head. During the game, no Princeton runner was able to reach third base.

Princeton defeated Yale at New Haven on June 2, by the score of 9-3. The game was intensely exciting, and very close until the eighth inning. Robertson weakened in sixth inning and was forced to retire in the eighth. The features of the game were Cook's running catch of Pearson's low liner to centre field, a double play by Meier and Pearson, and the batting of Hillebrand. Only one man reached first base for either team until the fourth inning when each side scored one run. In the fifth inning Yale added two runs. Then Princeton tied the score in the sixth inning on runs by Kafer and Hillebrand. Hutchings scored in the seventh, and in the eighth, Meier, Hillebrand and Burke. In the last inning Kafer and Meier scored.

Princeton won the second Yale game on June 11, by a remarkable batting rally in the ninth inning. In the first eight innings Princeton scored four base hits, but no runs; while Yale scored three runs. In the first inning Quinby hit a liner just out of Chapman's reach, and made the circuit of the bases before the ball was recovered. In the fifth inning Quinby knocked a high fly over Burke's head and reached third base. Camp was hit by a pitched ball; Cook was out (Hutchinson to Pearson), and Camp went to second base. Then Sharpe knocked a hit past Burke for three bases sending Quinby and Camp home. Sullivan was given his base on balls, and stole second. With men on second and third bases, Hillebrand struck out Guernsey. Yale increased the score to 4-0 in the first half of the ninth inning. Robertson hit safely to right field; Quinby knocked a high fly which Hutchinson caught. Camp hit to Steinwender, forcing Robertson to second base. Then Cook hit to right field for his third safe drive and Camp scored when Hutchinson muffed Burke's throw to third. But the side was retired when Sharpe struck out. With the game practically over, Princeton began the last half of the last inning with the score 4-0 in Yale's favor, and yet Princeton won. Hutchings batted for Watkins and got a scratch hit over third base that was good for two bases. Steinwender was hit by Robertson and sent to first. Kafer hit past first base safely, sending Hutchings across the plate for Princeton's first run. Steinwender reached third base and Kafer second on Sullivan's throw to the home plate. Meier made another single hit and reached second base, while Steinwender and Kafer scored. Hillebrand hit to Camp but the latter could not pick up the ball and juggled it, until Meier had reached third base and Hillebrand stood on first base. Yale then put Garvan into the box. Burke hit the second ball that was pitched, to Sharpe who picked it up, ran toward first base, hesitated and threw it home too late to catch Meier as he scored the tying run. Hillebrand and Burke made a pretty double steal, for Hirsh's throw was too slow. Then Pearson struck out. Chapman, the next man at the bat, hit cleanly to left field and Hillebrand scored the winning run.

The final game of the season was won from Harvard on Commencement Day by the score of 9-2. In the first inning Steinwender was hit by a pitched ball and went to first base. Kafer knocked a swift hit which bounced off Stillman's hand to Coolidge who threw Steinwender out at second base. Then Meier knocked the first ball pitched to him, over centre-fielder's head for a three base hit, and Kafer scored. Hillebrand made a single hit that allowed Meier to score. Burke hit an easy grounder to Stillman who put Hillebrand out at second base. Burke stole second while the ball was still in Stillman's hand. Pearson followed with a three base hit beyond Kendall that allowed Burke to score. In the second inning, Hutchinson made a pretty bunt and reached first base on Clarke's error. He stole second, went to third on Watkin's sacrifice hit and scored on Steinwender's hit. Steinwender stole second and scored on Kafer's hit. In the third inning each nine scored one run. Coolidge hit a liner between second base and right field for three bases. Then Stillman hit a long fly to Chapman and Coolidge scored on the throw-in. For Princeton, Hillebrand made a single base hit, Burke followed with a two base hit that put Hillebrand on third base. Then Pearson made a safe hit and Hillebrand scored; but Burke was thrown out in an attempt to steal home. Princeton scored her last runs in the fourth inning. Stillman hit Watkins and Steinwender with two successive balls. Kafer advanced both men by a sacrifice hit. Then Meier cleared the bases with a home run far into left field. After this Kernan took Stillman's place and gave only four hits in the last five innings. Harvard scored her last run in the seventh inning, when Fincke secured second base on Meier's bad throw and scored on a single hit by Clarke. The game closed with the score 9-2 in Princeton's favor. This ended the season for it was impossible to arrange for a third deciding game with Harvard.

*In the Rutgers game, Freshman Underhill struck out ten batters, allowed four hits and gave only one base on balls—which was very good for a new player. The Princeton players batted hard and safely, scoring seventeen hits in their six innings. The base running was excellent. In all but one inning Princeton scored quite easily. Rutgers' only run was earned on two hits in the first inning.

Princeton beat Manhattan College, 5-4, on March 27. Freshman Stevens was tried in the box. He allowed only seven hits, but was somewhat wild, giving four bases on balls and hitting two men. Underhill pitched the last two innings; he struck out two men and allowed no hits. It was a close game. At the end of the seventh inning the score was tied at four each. In the last half of the ninth, Princeton won out on hits by Freshmen Davis and Cosgrave, with none out. All the Princeton players batted well, and had only one strike out. And the Manhattan pitcher has a veteran reputation.

Vail took the box in the eighth and allowed but one run. Princeton batted hard and safely, securing seventeen hits off the three Tufts pitchers. The visitors were very erratic in the field.

For the first time on record the baseball nine won all the games on its Easter trip south.

Princeton beat the Montreal Eastern League, 7-6, on April 4. After Princeton had scored twice (including a home run by Brown), Montreal secured a seemingly safe lead of four runs in the fourth and fifth innings. But in the seventh Princeton tied the score by heavy batting and won out in the eighth, when Davis scored on Shincell's overthrow to third base.

Meier secured two home runs, a three base hit and two singles. Hillebrand and Pearson each had four hits, one of Pearson's being a home run. The new rules were used for the first time and proved a serious handicap to the pitchers.

Hard hitting gave Princeton an overwhelming baseball victory in the first of the two games with Cornell, on University Field, May 1, by the score of 21-2. For three innings it was a close game, neither side being able to score. But in the fourth, Princeton solved Lyon's delivery.

Many hits, supplemented by some wild pitching, piled up nine runs, and left no doubt of the outcome. Princeton continued to score steadily and easily till the end of the game. Underhill's pitching was very effective. He struck out five batters and allowed but four hits in six innings. Then Stevens was substituted and did well, allowing no hits. Hillebrand kept up his fine batting record, making one three base hit, four singles and two sacrifices out of seven times at bat. The fielding was not as sure as usual—but bad weather and some injuries had retarded the development of team play in the recent practice.

Cornell beat Princeton, 6-1, at Ithaca on May 11. This first defeat of the season was the more surprising because Princeton had beaten Cornell, 21-3, only ten days before. It was an off day for the Princeton batters. That lost the game. They made only three safe hits. And Cornell batted hard, with eleven hits off Underhill and two off Hillebrand, who went into the box in the eighth. In Cornell's first inning (with two out) a two-bagger, a single and a base on balls filled the bases. Hutchings retired the side on a grounder to third, but Cornell scored one run before the play was completed. In the fifth, two hits added another score for Cornell; and in the seventh, a single, a base on balls, Hutchings' error, a long fly, a two-bagger and another hit netted four more runs for Cornell. Princeton's only tally was made on a single by Brown and Green's two-bagger.

Princeton beat Lawrenceville on May 13 at Lawrenceville, 21-0, in a six-innings game. Princeton's hard batting and Lawrenceville's errors made it an easy victory. Stevens allowed but three hits and struck out four men, giving no bases on balls. Hamilton and Stevens, each got four hits and Hillebrand three. For Lawrenceville, Westervelt pitched well and the outfielders threw accurately.

Princeton beat Brown, 4-3, in their second game on May 15. It was close and exciting. When Princeton got four hits and four runs in the first inning it looked easy. But that ended the scoring until the ninth—and then it was done by Brown. After the fortunate first, Princeton got only one safe hit off Lynch, and only three men on bases. Meantime Brown was hitting Underhill in about every inning—but up to the ninth, very excellent fielding and Underhill's control and coolness prevented scoring. Then Brown cut loose. Four hits, one man hit by pitched ball, two errors, and a general mix-up gave Brown three runs, and with two out, and a man on first and second, it was a nervous moment. The Brown batsman had already made two hits—and another would probably have won the game for Brown. Captain Green called Freshman Hillebrand into the box—that's the way two other close games were won. And it doubtless saved this one. Hillebrand pitched just three balls. The first was a strike, the second was a ball and the third was a little dribbling grounder, which Hillebrand fired to first just in time to end the game.

Princeton beat the strong Georgetown nine, 7-6, for the second time this season, on University Field on May 18. It was a most exciting game, with a characteristic Princeton finish; for the score was 6-3 the wrong way when the home team came to the bat in the last half of the ninth inning. For three innings neither side got a man beyond second. But in the fourth Georgetown scored five runs. It was a bad inning all around. With one out, a base on balls, Cosgrave's error, a single, another base on balls, another hit and a wild throw to first by Stevens, were responsible for the five runs, none of which was earned. For the rest of the game, Freshman Stevens pitched very well, and in the entire game Georgetown got only four safe hits off his delivery. But Georgetown's sixth run was due to Stevens' wild pitch in the ninth. Meantime, Princeton was getting better every inning. And Georgetown had to use four pitchers. In the sixth inning, four singles (by Cosgrave, Meier, Hillebrand and Brown) and a double (by Pearson) scored two runs. Blewett, Georgetown's pitcher, gave way to Cox in the seventh; and Steinwender scored on Meier's hit. In the ninth, after Cox had hit both Steinwender and Cosgrave, he was replaced by McKay, the third Georgetown pitcher. McKay gave Meier a base on balls, filling the bases, then hit Hillebrand and forced in Princeton's fourth run. McKay gave way to Fay. Brown's grounder forced Cosgrave out at the plate, but Davis (who batted for Pearson) hit safely to centre field, scoring Meier and Hillebrand and making it a tie. Finally Hutchings' sharp single past third scored Brown and won the game amid wild enthusiasm. Princeton had only one out when the winning run was made.

He gave four bases on balls and struck out seven men. The batting of the home team was good and the fielding was fair.

Yale won the first baseball game of the championship series, at New Haven on June 1, by the close score of 9-8. It was like the game at Princeton last Commencement—a ninth inning victory—but with all the fun for the other fellow this time. It isn't quite so bad though, for this was the first instead of the last game. And Princeton still has a chance to win the series. It was a very disastrous finish to a race that was won—all but. When the last half of the last inning began, Princeton was five runs to the good, the score being 8-3. But the rest was a sad story. With one out Captain Robertson hit a three-bagger. Then there was an agonizing mix-up of fumbles and bad throws, which were responsible for the defeat. And this was more surprising, because Princeton had played an almost faultless game in the field. After Meier's fumble, a hit and Hutchings' bad throw had given Yale three runs, Underhill was succeeded in the box by Hillebrand. Sharpe made the second out, Hutchings to Meier. But another hit and Cosgrave's three bad throws in succession let in the three runs that made the score 9-8 in Yale's favor. Up to the disastrous ninth inning, Princeton clearly outclassed Yale. Garvan, who pitched for Yale, was rather wild; also he was poorly supported. Captain Robertson succeeded Garvan in the seventh and did better. Underhill pitched a strong game, and Princeton scored in six of the nine innings.

2 Base Hits. Cosgrave, Guernsey. Home Runs, Cosgrave, Hillebrand. Stolen Bases, Pearson, Cook 2, Winslow. 1st Base on Errors, P. 4, Y. 3. Bases on Balls, off Underhill 1, off Sharpe 1. By hard batting Princeton piled up fifteen runs to Yale's five in the second game of their series on June 8. It was, as usual, the great athletic event of Commencement week, with the customary jollity of alumni P-grades, bands, and banners; the organized cheering of the undergraduates, and the approving enthusiasm of numerous young women who applauded base hits and errors with delightful indiscriminatio and could not have distinguished either from an hypothetical imperative. The day was beautiful and the crowd was bigger than ever. Though the victory was decisive from the first inning, the excitement never lagged—perhaps because it was very good fun to see a Princeton team not only beating but completely routing their ancient and honorable rival.

The most notable feature of the game was the great pitching of Freshman Underhill, who allowed only five scattered hits and but one base on balls. But there were brilliant plays in the field, especially by Brown in left who pulled down two very difficult flies after long runs. Both Robertson and Sharpe, the Yale pitchers, were batted freely—which, of course, accounts for Princeton's large score.

Princeton scored from the start, and in all but three innings. In the first, four runs were made. Steinwender, the first man up, singled. Cosgrave hit safely, and Meier was safe at first when Winslow muffed his fly to right field. Steinwender scored meantime. Hillebrand was thrown out at first, but Cosgrave and Meier scored on Brown's three-bagger. Then Pearson hit safely and Brown scored. A double play by Waddell and Sharpe retired Pearson and Hutchings, and the side. Score, Princeton 4, Yale 0.

This good start was made better in the fourth. Brown's hit, Pearson's sacrifice, Guernsey's low throw to catch Hutchings at first, and Green's hit scored two more, making it 6-0.

Yale's first scoring came in the fifth. Cook was safe on a fast hit to Hutchings, and Meier's error saved O'Rourke, while Cook, having stolen second, scored, Winslow sacrificed O'Rourke to second, and the latter scored on Eliason's hit. For Princeton, Hillebrand hit safely, reached second on Brown's safe bunt, third on Pearson's sacrifice and scored on Hutchings' hit. Princeton 7, Yale 2.

In the sixth, two hits scored one for Yale, and Princeton added four runs. Underhill waited for four bad balls, Cosgrave was hit by the pitcher (Sharpe), Meier was safe on O'Rourke's error, and, after Underhill had scored, Hillebrand drove a home run over left field, scoring also Cosgrave and Meier. Princeton 11, Yale 3.

Four more were added in the eighth. First, Cosgrave smashed a long home run over left field. Then Meier, Pearson, Hutchings and Green hit safely, scoring the first three. Princeton 15, Yale 3.

Finally in the ninth Yale got two more runs on Cook's hit, O'Rourke's base on balls, Hillebrand's two muffs of difficult drives to centre, and Hirsch's hit. But the game was closed in the proper fashion, for with two men on bases and two out Underhill struck out Captain Robertson. Princeton 15, Yale 5.

By timely hitting, superior base running and great fielding just when it was needed, Princeton beat Yale, 5-2, at New York on June 15. Shut out for eight innings, in the ninth Yale made a plucky effort to turn defeat into victory, but Princeton's fine fielding prevented a repetition of the disaster of two weeks before.

Both Cook and Underhill pitched good ball. For eight hits off the former was not so much for this Princeton team; and Underhill allowed only three safe ones up to the ninth. Waddell played a strong game for Yale and the fielding of Brown and Hillebrand was phenomenal. The day was bad and part of the game was played in a drizzle; but both colleges were well represented in the crowd, and the cheering and singing were spirited. Neither side scored four innings, though both had several men on bases. In the fifth Meier's hard drive brought in two runs, and in the sixth Brown's two-bagger, Pearson's muffed fly, Hutchings' fly to Winslow and Underhill's single scored two more. In the seventh the figures were increased to 5-0. Cosgrave and Meier singled and the former scored when Hirsch threw over first base. In the eighth, left-fielder Brown made a great play. Guernsey had reached first on an error and Waddell smashed a long drive to left that looked like a three-bagger. But Brown nimbly pulled it down and by a throw of remarkable distance and accuracy put the ball in Pearson's mitt before Guernsey could return to first. Finally in the ninth, Yale's desperate rally brought the game and series to a spectacular finish; with two out and O'Rourke on second, Eliason beat out a slow tap, and Hirsch hit to left, scoring O'Rourke with Yale's first run. Then Robertson waited for four bad balls and the bases were full. Guernsey hit to Hutchings, whose assist was too late to catch Robertson at second, and Eliason scored on the play. Waddell, a good hitter, was at the bat with the bases full. It was a great opportunity. And Waddell rose to the occasion. But Meier rose too. The hit was a smashing liner. Meier caught the ball—almost in left field—and the season of 1901 ended right there.

FOOTBALL.

Football was first played in Princeton in 1840, though the sport then was far different from the present intricate game. Some fellows who wanted fun and exercise would "chip in" and buy a leather cover for an inflated beef bladder. It was necessary to have a supply of these bladders on hand, for the stout kicks frequently burst them. At noon or at five o'clock the fellows collected at the Cannon, divided into equal sides by some simple scheme of allotment, and the play began. The ball was tossed up in the air, then all rushed for it. There was no organization, no rules, except that the ball must be kicked, never carried. The side won which succeeded in kicking the ball against East or West College.

In the year 1858 the round, rubber, "Association" ball was used. This could be kicked much farther, and some men were able to send the ball on a single kick from the Cannon to the wall. But later such goals were debarred by rule. It is rather surprising to hear the opinion of an "old grad." that "the old game was rougher than the modern Rugby game. Barked shins were common in scrimmages. A hit from the ball kicked by a heavy player was no light matter, while the crush about the ball when near bounds was often as stifling as a Sophomore-Freshman Rush." Evidently he has not played the later game. In his game there was less room for "science." The only possible skill was in a crude form of team play, in "nursing" the ball in a free field; in kicking far, in the best direction, and at the proper elevation.

From 1859 to 1867 a spasmodic interest was shown in the game. One record in 1865 recounts how a game was stopped for a brief interval until the students had passed a motion, that at nine o'clock in the evening the entire student body should wait on Secretary of State Seward at Judge Field's house, and call for a speech. In 1867 the game became more popular, but the students always waited until "the weather became cool." Several match games were played between the classes, in which experience seem to decide, for '68 defeated '69, '69 defeated '70, and '70 defeated '71. Then a team was picked from the college, which, under the leadership of S. Waugh, '68, and E. M. Turner, '68, played the Seminary on the college grounds, and beat them five games (goals) out of seven. But the return game on the Seminary grounds was never played.

In the fall of 1869 the players became more ambitious, and challenged the team from Rutgers, and two games were played, each college winning one. The Rutgers Targum says:

"On Saturday, November 6, Princeton sent '25' picked men to play our '25' a match game of football. The strangers came up at 10 o'clock and brought a good number of backers with them. After dinner and a stroll around town, during which stroll billiards received a good deal of attention, the crowd began to assemble at the ball ground. Previous to calling the game the ground presented an animated appearance. Grim looking players were silently stripping, each one surrounded by sympathizing friends, while around each captain was a little crowd, intent upon giving advice and saying as much as possible. The appearance of the Princeton men was very different from that of our own players. They were almost without exception tall and muscular, while the majority of our '25' are small and light, but possess the merit of being up to much more than they look.

"Very few were the preliminaries, and they were quickly agreed upon. The Princeton captain, for some reason or other, gave up every point to our men without contesting one. The only material points were that Princeton give up 'free kicks,' whereby a player when he catches the ball in the air is allowed to kick it without hindrance. On the other hand our practice of 'babying' the ball on the start was discarded and the ball was mounted, in every instance, by a vigorous 'long kick.'

"Princeton won the toss and chose the first mount, rather oddly, since it had been agreed to start the ball against the wind. At 3 p. m. the game was called. The Princetonians suffered from making a very bad mount or 'buck' as they call it; the effects of which were not remedied before the sides closed, and after a brief struggle, Rutgers drove it home and won amid great applause from the crowd. The sides were changed, Rutgers started the ball and after a somewhat longer fight, Princeton made it a tie by a well directed kick, from a gentleman whose name we do not remember, but who did the best kicking on the Princeton side.

"To describe the varying fortunes of the match, game (goal) by game (goal), would be a waste of labor, for every game (goal) was like the one before. There was the same headlong running, wild shouting and frantic kicking. In every game (goal) the cool goal tenders saved the Rutgers goal six times. In every game (goal) the heavy charger of the Princeton side overthrew everything he came in contact with; and in every game (goal) just when the interest in one of those delightful rushes at the fence was culminating, the persecuted ball would fly for refuge into the next lot and produce a cessation of hostilities until, after the invariable 'foul,' it was put on straight.

"Well, at last we won the match, having won the 1st, 3d, 5th, 6th, 9th, 10th games (goals); leaving Princeton the 2d, 4th, 7th, 8th. The 7th would probably have been added to our score but for one of our players who, in his ardor, forgot the way he was kicking; a mistake he fully atoned for afterward.

"To sum up, Princeton had the most muscle, but didn't kick very well, and wanted organization. They evidently don't like to kick the ball on the ground. Our men, on the other hand, though comparatively weak, ran well and kicked well throughout. But their greatest point was their organization, for which great praise is due to the captain, Leggett, '72. The right men were always in the right place. After the match the players had an amicable 'feed' together, and at eight o'clock our guests went home, in high spirits, but thirsting to beat us next time, if they can."

PRINCETON VS. RUTGERS.

New Brunswick, November 6, 1869.

Princeton, 4; Rutgers, 6.

Princeton won the second match at Princeton one week later. The agreement was that the victory should be given to the side making eight out of fifteen games, or goals. But Princeton won the first eight and the game was cut short. Then two exhibition innings were played according to the Rutgers style of play, both of which they won. The Targum says:

"The style of playing differs materially in the two colleges, a fly or first bound catch entitles to a 'free kick,' a la Princeton. We bat with hands, feet, head, sideways, backwards, any way to get the ball along. We must say that we think our style much more exciting and more as football should be. It is but fair to our '25' to say that they never practised the "free-kick" system. At half-past six we sat down to a very fine supper, prepared for us by our hosts. Speeches and songs, accompanied, of course, by the study of practical gastronomy, passed the time pleasantly until the evening train bore us Brunswickward. We hope soon to welcome Princeton to New Brunswick for the third game, and beat them. Their cheer, sounding as if they meant to explode, but for a fortunate escape of air, followed by a grateful yell at the deliverance of such a catastrophe, still sounds in our ears as we thank them for their hospitality. If we must be beaten we are glad to have such conquerors."

Princeton, 8; Rutgers, 0.

Unfortunately, however, the third game was never played. There is no complete list of the Princeton "25"; W. S. Gummere, '70, was captain; H. D. Boughner, '71 and G. S. Billmeyer, '71, were called "Captains of the enemies' goal," a position vaguely corresponding to fullback; and the other players whose names are recorded are:

In the fall of 1870, A. Van Rensselaer, '71, became captain, and several games were won from the "Seminole." One game was played with Rutgers, resulting in a victory.

The continued interest in the game led to a definite organization, and in the fall of 1871, when A. Johnson, '72, was captain, a committee of four, one from each class, was appointed by the old players to take charge of the team, select new players and arrange the contests. The members of this committee were A. Johnson, '72, D. T. Marvel, '73, T. G. Ricketts, '74 and H. Moffat, '75. But there are no records, for the team met no sturdier foes than the Seminole.

Of the team of 1872, the Lit. says:

"Though football is confined to a comparatively small portion of the year, and though each graduating class seems to take away our best players, yet the interest in it, year by year, rather increases than diminishes, and the present '25' at least will, we think, compare favorably and we doubt not, would cope successfully with any of their predecessors."

The team well deserved praise, not only for its skill in the game, but its important advance in organization. The rules governing the game at Princeton had hitherto been mainly traditional and were often allowed to be varied at pleasure. But this year definite rules were adopted, as follows:

- I. The grounds shall be 500 feet in length by 300 feet in breadth.
  - II. The goal posts shall be 25 feet apart.
  - III. The number for match games shall be 25 to the side.
  - IV. To a game, 4 of 7 goals are necessary.
  - V. The winner of the toss shall have the choice of goals.
  - VI. No player shall throw or carry the ball.
  - VII. Any player catching a ball, after it had been kicked or knocked, and before it touches the ground, shall be entitled to a free kick.
  - VIII. Any ball passing the boundary lines shall be kicked or knocked in with full force. If passing the side limits, by the player first touching the ball; if passing goal limits, by a player of the side defending the goal.
  - IX. No holding shall be allowed, except when a player has a ball in his possession, not caught on a fly.
  - X. No tripping shall be allowed, nor shall any player use his hands to push an adversary.
- These rules were criticized, as all later ones have been. The Lit. says: "We would note, in relation to these rules, that there is no one which states directly what shall constitute a foul, nor is there a rule directing what shall be done in case of a foul, though the practice is to throw the ball straight up in the air; still we would think it ought to be stated in the rules. Again, there is no provision made for judges or referees. We suppose it was not thought necessary to make special mention of them, still in baseball rules, provision is always made for an umpire, and in football, we do not think such an important feature should be taken for granted. Rules 3d and 7th differ from the general practice of other colleges, twenty being the usual number on a side, and no free kick being allowed, when any of the opposite party are near enough to prevent it."

As soon as the rules were adopted challenges were sent to Columbia, Yale and Rutgers. Columbia replied that they would not be able to play that season. Yale at first objected to the conditions, but Princeton offered to waive the more objectionable features, if Yale would also consent to compromise a little. The match, however, did not take place, as the Yale Faculty were unwilling that so many should leave town at once, and a similar difficulty stood in the way of the Princeton "25" going to New Haven.

But in the case of Rutgers there was better success. Princeton and Rutgers had tried their relative strength in football for several years, Princeton being generally successful. This time the conditions were that Princeton play by the Rutgers rules, which differed from Princeton's not only in the two points already mentioned, but also in several other important particulars. Accordingly only twenty men played on each side.

The game came off on November 23. The day was cloudy and the ground soaked with the rain of the preceding night. At half-past three the game commenced, and Princeton having won the toss, had the kick-off. According to the rules a straight out kick was not necessary, but the side which had the ball carried it with them as long as they could, and in this first game (goal) Princeton carried it all the way: rather astonishing Rutgers, who did not even have a kick at it the whole game (goal).

The second game (goal) was better contested but was won by Princeton. The third went the other way, and again the Rutgers men seemed astonished, this time at their own success. The fourth game (goal) was the most hotly contested of all, lasting nearly an hour. In justice to Rutgers it must be said they guarded their home splendidly, for almost all this time the ball was kept just before their goal. The fifth game was quickly won by Princeton, but by the time the sixth had well begun it began to grow dark. By this time, too, the field was badly cut up, and the occasional falls of the players left them well marked with the red mud.

At this point the referee attempted to call the game, but the Rutgers men insisting that it be called a draw, because a series of five out of nine had not been played, play was resumed. After a little, however, it became too dark to distinguish anything, and this time the Rutgers referee, after some dispute, assented to calling the game, with a score of 4-1 in favor of Princeton.

Rutgers excelled in batting the ball on the fly and in guarding home. Princeton showed the effect of campus practice and work in the Gym; and their acquaintance with the free kick showed itself in the way in which the ball was forwarded at every good opportunity, in long kicks, and in quick getting after the ball.

On October 19 an intercollegiate convention of the football delegates was held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York City. The delegates from Yale were Messrs. Porter and Halsted; from Rutgers, Messrs. Searing and Fuller; from Princeton, Messrs. T. G. Ricketts, '74, and I. H. Lionberger, '75. Columbia appointed Messrs. Fenney and Whitlock, but these gentlemen failed to put in an appearance. Harvard refused to send delegates to this convention, claiming that their method of playing was so radically different from other colleges that no possible advantage could be derived.

The following rules were unanimously adopted by Yale, Rutgers and Princeton:

- I. The ground shall be 400 feet long by 250 feet broad.
- II. The distance between the posts of each goal shall be 25 feet.
- III. The number for match games shall be twenty to a side.
- IV. To win a game six goals are necessary, but that side shall be considered the victors which, when the game is called, shall have secured the greatest number of goals, provided that number be two or more. To secure a goal, the ball must pass between the posts.
- V. No player shall throw or carry the ball. Any violation of this regulation shall constitute a foul, and the player so offending shall throw the ball, perpendicularly into the air, to a height of at least twelve feet, and the ball shall not be in play until it has touched the ground.
- VI. When a ball passes out of bounds, it is a foul, and the player causing it shall advance at right angles to the boundary line, fifteen paces from the point where the ball went, and shall proceed as in Rule V.
- VII. No tripping shall be allowed, nor shall any player use his hands to hold or push an adversary.
- VIII. The winners of the toss shall have the choice of first goal, and the sides shall change goals at every successive inning. In starting the ball it shall be fairly kicked, not batted, from a point 150 feet in front of the starter's goal.
- IX. Until the ball is kicked, no player on either side shall be in advance of a line parallel to the line of his goal, and distant from it 150 feet.
- X. There shall be two judges, one from each of the contesting colleges, and one referee; all to be chosen by the captains.

XI. No player shall wear spikes or iron plates on his shoes.

XII. In all match games a No. 6 ball shall be used, furnished by the challenging side, and to become the property of the victors.

The game with Rutgers was scheduled for October 26, but it was postponed from that date to November 1, then to November 5, and finally indefinitely, for the Rutgers men wanted to play at Princeton during recitation hours, and naturally the Princeton Faculty prevented the game. But the arrangements were successfully completed for the Yale game. The Princeton men had been training by running a half hour a day in the Gym and by frequent practice in kicking. On November 14 the twenty Princetonians went to New Haven on the night boat, and almost froze. But at 2 p. m. they were on the field, ready to begin the first game of football ever played between Yale and Princeton. Yale won the toss, and gave Princeton the ball, which Moffat bucked, and the game was started. During the first half hour Princeton was roughly handled: Yale played a bucking, rushing game, such, as many years later, was developed into interference. This surprised and confused the Princetonians, whose policy was to follow the ball closely, neglecting, as far as possible, the play of the opponents. Yale would probably have won, but luckily two men tried to kick the ball at the same time. Each toe hit it squarely, and the ball burst. It was fully a half hour before another ball could be secured, and during this delay the Princetonians gathered together, and decided to try the rushing game. Of course they did not succeed as well as Yale, and luckily, for their tendency to follow the ball won the game. In these early games the players had no definite positions. They all followed the play from end to end and side to side, except four men, two of whom guarded the home goal and the other two stayed close to the enemy's goal, so that if the ball was kicked near, they could bat it through with their hands. And in this way Princeton secured the only three goals of the game, Beach batting two and Elder the third.

1874-75.

I. H. LIONBERGER, '75, Captain.

Princeton won the college championship for 1874, even though the only games were against Rutgers and Columbia. In fact the twenty never lost a goal; for the majority of them were excellent kickers, having learned to kick with the whole top of the foot and instep, rather than the toe.

The playing in the Columbia game was very spirited and excelled that of former years. The game was played with eighteen men on a side instead of twenty, for two of the Columbia men had missed their train. Weeks had several teeth knocked down his throat in a tackle but otherwise there were few accidents. There was a high wind blowing that carried the light ball for a great distance. This enabled Columbia to make a goal in thirty seconds. The ball was kicked by one of them, then batted by Train high up in the air where the wind caught it and carried it over the heads of all the Princeton men and across the goal.

In the game on November 20, the playing on both sides was very good. One of the finest kicks ever made on the Princeton grounds was the drop-kick made by McCosh during the fifth goal. Unfortunately it went out of bounds. During the fifth goal the Stevens men made a determined defense of their home, and showed some good playing.

In 1875-'76 baseball was in a flourishing condition. All the larger colleges met regularly, the enthusiasm was great, and the championship was easily settled, since the winner had beaten all colleges entitled to compete. In football the situation was different, and to many Princetonians wholly unsatisfactory. Princeton, it is true, stood in the van with a long, unbroken record of championships at the "Association" or "American" game, but these victories, with the exception of the single Yale game of 1873, had been over smaller colleges. For several years an unsuccessful effort had been made to arrange contests with Yale and Harvard. But Yale, though playing the Association game, restricted its matches to the New England colleges. Harvard, on the other hand, had adopted the English game, with the Rugby Union rules, and was confining its games to McGill University, All Canada, Tufts and a few others. In the fall of 1875 Harvard and Yale, each tenacious of its game, had compromised upon a set of rules, which made a hodge-podge of the Association and Rugby games, and played a match at Springfield, Mass. Many college men had hoped that the compromise game would prove satisfactory and result in a basic set of rules under which all the colleges could meet at football. A number of Princeton men attended the Springfield game with this expectation in view, but the result was hopeless; the two games were so radically different in principle that each was spoiled, and there was nothing but a chaotic struggle, without order or discipline.

In the spring of 1876, the Lit. contained the following comments: "Judging from our own experience and all accounts of the recent Yale-Harvard game, we are decidedly inclined to prefer the rules of 1873, as not only fairer to both parties but also as rather less rowdyish and much more scientific than those of Harvard. We fail to see the sport in being disgracefully mauled in such unmanly scrimmages as are necessary attendants upon such rough games, and there is but little science or skill in the playing which characterizes Harvard's games. What would be thought of the catcher of a baseball nine striking out in hot haste to catch, hold or maul a player running to first, and using every means in his power to prevent that player's reaching the base, until the ball has preceded him there? Football is fully as capable as baseball, of skilful and scientific playing, and we confess ourselves utterly unable to account for the taste which prefers Harvard's rough and tumble scrimmages to the incomparably more genteel game as played under the rules of 1873."

But the situation demanded more serious consideration than this. J. Potter, '77, writes: "In the early fall of 1876, a small number of us began to study the problem and quickly came to the conclusion, (1) that the Rugby Union game, all things considered, was better than the Association game in discipline and strategy; (2) that it was the only game on which the larger colleges could possibly be united, and (3) that Princeton must lead the way in a movement for a championship union, since her record of victories entitled her to do so. Upon first agitating the matter we were met by determined opposition on the part of a majority of the students and alumni. The staple argument of the conservatives was that Princeton now held the foremost place among the colleges at football, and therefore stood to lose much and gain little by the change. 'Let Yale and Harvard come and take away our championship on our own grounds at our own game,' they said. But the larger view gained support and we soon felt strong enough to call a mass meeting of the students to vote upon the question. It was held in the old Geological Hall on November 2, and was a lively 'scrimmage.' I remember very well making several vigorous speeches, with noisy demonstrations from both sides, and standing as the target in a bombardment of sarcasm from the conservative and timid, including some recent graduates who essayed to dominate the meeting. As to the eventual adoption of the Rugby rules there was little opposition; the serious question was the advisability of playing under them this year. By a very narrow majority, resolutions were passed inaugurating the reform movement and calling on the colleges to join it. The late W. Earle Dodge, '79 (captain of the victorious '78 team), was appointed with myself as a committee to draft and send out a call to Yale, Harvard and Columbia, to attend a meeting for the purpose of forming a football association under modified Rugby Union rules. Favorable responses were received promptly from the three colleges, and Mr Dodge and I went to Springfield, Mass., on November 23, as delegates to attend the convention.

"At this time Harvard and Princeton were upon terms of exceptional friendliness, while there had been some passing friction with Yale. As a consequence the eight delegates found themselves ranged upon two sides on many questions, Columbia acting throughout with Yale. The method of procedure adopted was to take up seriatim the Rugby Union rules, and to discuss and modify them with the purpose of creating a more orderly and systematic game, with stricter penalties for fouls, umpired by independent officials, instead of, by the captains. Many difficult situations arose requiring tact and good temper, in which Mr. Dodge and myself, as representing the college responsible for the convention and most determined to realize its objects, endeavored to harmonize the factions and bring about definite results. On most matters Yale, like the conservative element at Princeton, stood by the traditions of the old Association game—for twenty men on a team, for a method of scoring, in which goals only should count, etc. Harvard stood for a score by touchdowns alone. Fifteen men were finally decided upon as the strength of a team (soon reduced to eleven in 1880), and the score was determined by touchdowns, a goal counting as four touchdowns. Many changes were made in the Rugby Union rules, and that these were wise seems to be indicated by the fact that further changes and modifications of the games, due to the experience of later years, have been largely in the same directions."

The convention adjourned after organizing a Football Association of the three colleges, for Yale did not join until the following year

In anticipation of the results of the convention a game under the new Rugby rules had been agreed upon with Yale for Thanksgiving Day. Through the courtesy of Harvard the game with them was postponed until the spring of 1877, when, after some practice, Princeton might meet Harvard on more equal terms. Yale had begun practice under the Rugby rules early in the fall, and had cancelled her schedule of Association games. The position of Princeton as holders of the championship did not permit of such a course, and they faithfully fulfilled their entire schedule of games with all challenging colleges up to the end of the season, winning the championship without loss of a goal.

The first of the season games was played at Germantown under Association rules, with the exception that the ball must be kicked over the ropes and between the crossbars in order to count a goal. It was also decided to play the best six out of eleven goals.

First Goal—Princeton had the kick-off, and drove it well toward the enemy's goal, but the effect of practice with Rugby rules was soon manifest, for the men as a rule played very badly, seeming unable to keep in position or follow the ball well up. Several times it was near the Princeton goal, and a well directed kick from the enemy would have given them a goal, when, more by Providence than good play, Princeton managed to extricate it. At last the boys got in to work after half an hour's dallying, and a beautiful catch and long drop kick by Dodge, sent the ball well toward the enemy's goal, when it was put over by Denny, '77.

Second Goal—The effects of training now began to show themselves, and while the opponents looked considerably "blowed," Princeton was just beginning to get in working trim. The men commenced to play their positions better, and there was less kicking low and missing the ball on the run. Little or no hand batting was done, and in the "tackle-ins" Princeton always cleared the track. All was fair play, no tripping or pushing, and the crowds surged now towards one goal, and again towards the other, till finally the ball was rushed toward the Pennsylvania goal, and kicked out by Potter.

Third Goal—McCosh led off with a beautiful kick-off about fifteen feet above ground and sixty or seventy yards long. Pennsylvania seemed demoralized, and the ball was put over their goal by Speir by a high kick from the side and under the posts.

Fourth Goal—Farnum bucked the ball, which was caught by McCosh and driven towards the enemy's goal. Here the fight was carried on until having been driven off towards the right side, it was kicked out by a most beautiful and scientific side-long kick by Laughlin, '77.

Fifth Goal—This goal was rushed through by Dodge, McCosh, Nicoll and Stevenson, and kicked out by Laughlin.

Sixth Goal—Van Dyke, having been disabled, J. L. Reynolds, '79, took his place. Pennsylvania fought hard to obtain one goal, and thus save themselves from a "Chicago," but all to no avail. After repeated "bounds," which caused some delay, the ball was kicked out by McCalmont.

After the game the club was entertained at dinner by the Pennsylvania team.

Goals—Time: 1—Princeton (Dodge), 25 mins. 2—Princeton (McCosh), 59 mins. 3—Princeton (Kretsinger), 30 mins.

The second game was played with Columbia on November 18. The Columbia game was governed by the Association rules, with the exception that no goal was to count unless the ball was sent over a line placed ten feet up the posts.

First Goal—Princeton won the toss, and put their backs to the wind; the kick-off by Price was followed in fine style, but when Princeton had returned the ball there was lively work in the centre of the field. This ended by Price again sending the ball down towards Princeton's goal, but the latter were on the alert, and with magnificent runs and handling, Laughlin made a fine try for Columbia's goal, but was unsuccessful, the ball going outside the posts and in touch. Columbia again started the ball, and followed it up so cleverly that, despite all the Orange and Black could do, they got it in front of their goal, where Lynch, with a creditable, but not sure kick, made a "poster." The Princeton team congratulated themselves on this narrow escape, and getting the ball once more in the centre of the field, combined their play, and forced it down to their opponents goal, where Dodge kicked it over.

Second Goal—McCosh led off with a beautiful kick; the ball was quickly returned by the Columbia chargers. During one of the rushes Stevenson bucked Lindley, and he was carried off the field insensible. This caused a delay of ten minutes; when the game began again McCalmont was kicked in the leg, and E. Parmly, '79, took his place. Dodge made a beautiful kick, but the ball went under the bar. Later McCosh kicked it over in a long kick.

Third Goal—It was now growing late, and both sides played desperately. Twice Princeton sent the ball over the Columbia line, the play being all in the southwest corner of the field. Finally Kretsinger kicked a goal. As it was very dark the game had to be called. Repeated fouls had prolonged it very much. The poor playing can be accounted for by the fact that each side had a number of substitutes; Princeton playing with five.

On November 25 the return game with University of Pennsylvania was played under Association Rules at Princeton.

First Goal—The game was called at 3:15, Princeton kicking off. The ball was well followed up by Princeton, passed gradually down to the right side of the opponent's goal, and the contest was chiefly there. Once the ball was kicked under the rope, and finally Parmly batted the ball, and an opponent, reaching up his hand to stop it, it bounced from his hands over the rope.

Second Goal—This was kicked out in 3½ minutes by Van Dyke, after some fine plays by Dodge.

Third Goal—This was hotly contested at first, but finally Dodge obtained the ball, sent it by a long kick to J. Scott, who put it over the rope.

Fourth Goal—Twice Pennsylvania ran the ball close down by the Princeton goal, and once put it under the rope. Irving was slightly hurt, and Cutts took his place. When the ball was in front of the Princeton goal, S. Johnston seized it, skilfully played up the field, and by a well directed kick placed the ball in front of Pennsylvania's goal, where Withington, by a long magnificent kick with his left leg, sent it home.

Fifth Goal—The ball was down by Pennsylvania's goal most of the time. Although they guarded it well, they could not prevent D. Laughlin from kicking goal.

Sixth Goal—This was quickly rushed through, and kicked off by F. Denny. Afterwards both teams were entertained at the University Hotel for dinner.

Meantime the Rugby eleven were trying to practice for their contest with Yale. But their time was largely taken up with the Association games and there was no opportunity of learning the game, except from books of rules, for no member of the team had played in or even witnessed a Rugby game. To be sure, one afternoon a Scotchman did come down from New York, but he coached the team according to the English rules which differed greatly from those adopted by the colleges.

Two balls were ordered from Canada and after long delay they arrived, but though leather covered, they were round. For some days the Princeton squad actually practised with these in full confidence that they had the correct thing. An appeal was finally made to the Harvard captain who sent on two real Rugby balls, and they arrived just four days before the Yale game. The shape of this

Princeton, 0. Yale, 2.

Goals—Time: 1—Yale (Thompson), 23 mins. 2—Yale (Thompson), 17 mins.

Yale won the Thanksgiving game by the small score of 2 goals to 0. Princeton had expected a severe defeat because of their inexperience and ignorance of the new rules. The Princeton team appeared for the first time in uniforms, wearing black jerseys and tights, with an orange P on the breast.

Princeton was fortunate enough to win the toss and Yale was compelled to defend the goal near the club house with the nipping wind blowing sharply in their faces.

The kick-off was made by Baker at twenty-five minutes past two o'clock, but the ball was quickly returned to the centre of the field by Princeton's half backs. It was then caught by Downer, who was downed. McCosh was "snivied" on by Camp who, when tackled, threw the ball forward to Thompson. Princeton at once claimed foul and ceased to try to prevent the touchdown. Much dissatisfaction was aroused against the referee, who, instead of deciding the question, actually tossed up a coin, and Yale was allowed the touchdown, from which Bigelow kicked the goal.

McCosh sent the ball from kick-off away back of Yale's goal line; the ball was quickly followed by two of Princeton's team; but Yale advanced the ball twenty-five yards and then kicked. Baker procured the ball but was downed by Denny and B. Nicoll. Then it went beyond the foul line, when Hatch secured the ball, was downed by McCalmont, who seized the ball and started on a run down field—to be stopped by the call of "Time."

Bigelow kicked off, but Princeton earnestly and stubbornly sent it back. Thompson caught the ball but was fiercely tackled by B. Nicoll. In falling Thompson threw the ball forward and Princeton claimed a foul. Although Thompson acknowledged that he had inadvertently thrown the ball forward, the referee allowed the ball to remain 20 paces from Princeton's line where the Yale forwards had advanced after the claim of foul. Stewart secured the ball and made a splendid run but Hatch got the ball from him and ran hard and well for Princeton's lines. Bigelow dribbled the ball out of a scrimmage and sent it to Thompson who kicked a goal.

Positions were again changed, and Princeton played with much more regularity, showing she was learning the game. Her men kept spread out better and worked more in unison. The half hour was full of good playing, but no goals were made before time was called.

This game gave Princeton a knowledge of the game, and the opinion that the referee should be from a neutral college. Though this defeat aroused the croakers at Princeton, the team kept up the practice whenever enough men could be found to play against the regular team. Some who should have played were afraid of hurting themselves, and others, of hurting their clothes. In this respect, the old game had an advantage. More could take part in it, and smaller and weaker men could hope for a place on the team; thus more were encouraged to try.

In the spring of 1877 the team had improved greatly. An attempt was made to arrange a game with Columbia, but Columbia could not collect her men. However, the Princeton fifteen went to Harvard on April 28.

Goals—Time: 1—Touchdown, Harvard, 10 mins. 2—Touchdown, Princeton (McNair '79). 3—Touchdown; goal Harvard (Cushing), 12 mins.

The Princeton fifteen had been doing well in practice, but as soon as the game began, one could see that they acted strangely. They were flurried, unused to the excitement. Harvard led off with a fine drop-kick. The nearest back was dazed, and stood still while a wearer of the crimson dashed by, and scored the first touchdown, but Seaman failed to kick goal. Princeton improved much, but lacked practice in passing the ball. The Princeton backs never kicked the ball, but after they had slowly worked it along for some distance, one of the Harvard men would kick it away over their heads, and their men would be down on it before Princeton. In the second half the ball was muffed by one of the Princetonians, and the Harvard captain, with wonderful quickness, caught it, and scored a touchdown, from which Seaman kicked a goal. During both the halves of 45 minutes the play was in Princeton's territory, but just before time was called, after a beautiful run, McNair gained the first touchdown for Princeton, and the only earned one of the game.

It was in this game that canvas jackets were used. The former games had been frequently interrupted, because the jerseys and clothing would be torn off the players, for a runner could be tackled only above the hips. In March, 1877, L. P. Smock, '79, made a canvas jacket, which he wore in the Harvard game. Later these jackets were worn by all colleges, since they fitted the body closely, and left no place for the opponent to grasp; consequently a more scientific and far better form of tackling was developed.

In spite of the two defeats Princeton was well satisfied with the new game, and looked forward eagerly to the contests of 1877, when, with a year's experience, Princeton would meet Yale and Harvard on more equal terms.

The old game of Association was revived by certain members of the class of '78, behind Reunion Hall. But the football directors and captain of the team decided to allow none but Seniors to participate, lest the practising of the old game should hurt the new Rugby game.

All the colleges had adopted the Rugby game, yet Princeton played only three games with Harvard, Columbia and Yale, because the season of 1876 had closed with a deficit of $132.

The first game of the season against Harvard was spirited, closely contested and very exciting.

Princeton, 1 T. D.; 1 goal. Harvard, 2 T. D.

1st Half—Harvard (Holmes); 1 Touchdown.
2d Half—Princeton (Ballard), 1 Touchdown; 1 goal. Harvard (Cushing); 1 Touchdown.

Both sides put forth their full powers. Harvard was over-confident at first, Princeton a little flurried. The running on both sides was excellent. The passing was skilful, but though Harvard men passed more, they passed indefinitely, while Princeton passed generally into the hands of some one of their own side.

The day was cloudless, with little wind, but the ground was soggy from recent rain. Princeton won the toss, and took advantage of the slight wind. Blanchard, of Harvard, kicked off, and the ball was advanced by the runs of Dodge, McNair, Wyllly and Enos, together with long punts of the backs, until Harvard was forced to make a safety touchdown. Immediately the ball was kicked and rushed to the centre of the field. Cushing seized the ball from a kick, and when tackled passed it to Holmes, who, after a brilliant run, secured a touchdown, almost directly behind the goal. The try-at-goal fell short, and the ball was slowly worked down towards the Harvard goal, when time was called.

After an intermission of fifteen minutes the second half of forty-five minutes began. Princeton played a stronger game, while Harvard seemed to weaken. McNair kicked off. Harrington, catching the ball, made a magnificent run, knocking off five men, but was finally stopped by the Princeton half backs, who were in turn seized by the Cambridge men, and for several minutes the ball was lost amid a struggling mass in the centre of the field, during which Captain Dodge had his shirt torn into ribbons. Suddenly Ballard was seen dashing across the grounds with the "leather" under his arm, overturning some, now dodging other Crimson men, till finally, after a most superb dash, he touched the ball down almost behind Harvard's goal.

Dodge placed the ball for Cutts to try at goal.

"Then for a little moment all people held their breath,
And 'mid the anxious multitude was a stillness as of death;
And in another moment, broke forth from one and all,
The well known rocket cheer from the men of Nassau Hall."

Cutts had kicked a beautiful goal.

Without delay the game proceeded, the Harvard men fighting with desperation, as the time was very short. The Princeton men, flushed with success, contested every inch of ground, all thoughts of personal safety were thrown aside, and each man fought with a fierceness and energy never before seen in a friendly contest. After many rough tumbles and fine runs, the ball was at last forced near Princeton's goal, where Cushing, M. S. seized it, but was tackled by Ballard, who, thinking "down" had been called, released his hold. Cushing immediately secured another touchdown. The point was not contested, as the referee and umpires were in another part of the field. But the punt-out was unsuccessful. The hopes of the Princeton spectators were falsely elated when they saw Dodge punt the ball across the bar, for they thought it was a drop-kick. In a few moments time was called, and Princeton had defeated Harvard in one of the finest college contests ever seen in America. Though the game was rough, the most friendly feeling prevailed.

Never in the history of football playing in this country had there been a more determined assault, and such determined and effective repulses. Brilliant charges were counted by the score; men were caught by the neck and twitched from their feet in a twinkling fifty times and over; fine displays of long kicking were repeatedly made; capital shots at goal essayed without result; magnificent runs prettily stopped; grand old scrimmages in the centre, and on the left and right of the field occurred, during which men were pitched and thrown in all directions, and Devonshire wrestling, not football, seemed to be the game; but in all this Harvard could make no progress.

Columbia came down to Princeton, on Nov. 17, but their team was not in good practice, as they had no regular grounds. Columbia acted mainly on the defensive, while Princeton was careless—as individuals, playing as well as ever, but as a team poorly.

As a whole, the game was not good. Princeton was too confident and Columbia tackled foully, below the knees. The result of this game left Princeton champions of the Football Association. The game was played with fourteen men because each side had a regular player disabled.

1—Drop Kick by Dodge 7 mins. 2—Touchdown by Loney; no goal by Dodge. 3—Touchdown by Enos; no goal by Cutts. 4—Touchdown by Bradford; no goal by Dodge. 5—Touchdown by Ballard; goal by Cutts. 6—Touchdown by Wylly; no goal by Cutts. 7—Touchdown by Lee; goal by Cutts. 8—Touchdown by Clarke; goal by Cutts.

Captain Brower kicked off and after several runs, Dodge scored the first goal by a beautiful drop-kick. A few moments later Loney made a touchdown, but Dodge failed to kick goal because of the blinding sunlight in his eyes. Before the forty-five minutes had passed Princeton secured two more touchdowns.

In the second half, Ballard repeated his beautiful run in the Harvard game, scoring a touchdown, from which Cutts kicked a goal. Soon Minor ran the entire length of the field and put the ball down behind Columbia's goal, but was called back for running out of bounds. McAlpin now took Ballard's place and the hard play continued. Once the Princeton goal was in danger, but Irving saved it, carrying the ball down field on a long run.

As yet no game had been arranged with Yale, who declined to become a member of the College Association, for she insisted upon playing with eleven men. Princeton upheld the College Association rules that required fifteen men, alleging that "the severity of the game told strongly in both danger and fatigue upon a smaller number of men, and the impossibility of playing the Rugby game with eleven as scientifically as it is intended to be played with fifteen or more." All efforts for a compromise proved of no avail and it seemed as if Yale would not meet any of her former foes. At last the Princeton team was disbanded. Suddenly, however, a telegram came two days before Thanksgiving, announcing that Yale would play with fifteen men on Thanksgiving Day; but on account of rain, the game was postponed to Dec. 8. Upon Yale's suggestion an agreement was entered into by both captains that the game should be decided by goals only, and that no touchdowns should count.

From the beginning to the end of the game, there seemed to prevade the Yale men a desire to injure and lay up the Princeton players on every occasion when there was no chance of detection. Soon after the kick-off by Barker, the ball was forced back over Princeton's line and Dodge was compelled to make a safety. Princeton worked the ball down almost to the Yale's line, forcing Yale to kick. Camp made a touchdown, by scattering the opposing backs. When the ball was punted out, the captain dashed through the crowd and claimed a touchdown, but it was not allowed as he had run out of bounds. Dodge kicked to centre field, after which each side made some good rushes, and Yale was forced to make a touchdown for safety. The ball was in Yale's territory until time was called.

NO CHAMPIONSHIP AWARDED.

In the second half, a Yale man was tackled by three Princetonians, and called "down" six feet from the Princeton's goal line, but the crowd of Yale sympathizers pushed in and shoved their man across the line. There was a great deal of disgraceful fighting and scrapping here and the referee finally allowed the touchdown. Trumbull, by a magnificent kick, sent the ball close to the Princeton goal, where Cutts made a safety touchdown. Some beautiful kicking followed, but what might have been an entertaining and enjoyable game to the spectators, was made long and uninteresting by the numerous disputes and frequent claims of foul by Yale, though the halves were only of regulation duration—forty-five minutes. Yale had made two touchdowns, but Princeton had failed to cross the Yale line; Yale was forced to make two touchdowns for safety and Princeton five. During the whole game there were 16 straight kicks for Princeton, 15 for Yale; and 16 field kicks, 31 fouls and 29 scrimmages.

Although Yale had crossed the Princeton goal line twice, yet their own rules declared the game a tie and consequently, no championship was awarded.

Immediately after the kick-off by Captain Elliott, the visitors began to play a defensive game, rarely running, though frequently kicking. The Princeton men played carelessly at first, and for twenty minutes gained neither goal nor touchdown, though they were within a few feet of their opponents' goal, with wind and grade in their favor. Finally Devereux made a long diagonal run, and made a touchdown. Lee made another, but no goal was kicked in either case.

In the second half, by a succession of good runs and a long kick, Larkin was forced to make the only Princeton touchdown for safety. Loney, McDermott, Bryan and Ballard each made touchdowns after long runs, and the game closed, 2 goals and 4 touchdowns to 0 in favor of Princeton.

On October 26, Stevens visited Princeton, and were easily defeated by the score of 4 goals and 6 touchdowns.

McNair kicked off for Princeton. The ball was carried down to the goal line of Stevens amid some good play. McNair then took it and running up, passed it to Bryan, who, amid great cheering, quickly secured a touchdown in four minutes; McNair kicked the goal. Conover kicked off and made a splendid run, but was tackled by Bryan. Finally McNair again took the ball and ran it to Bryan, who made the second touchdown.

Then ensued some lively scrimmage at the goal. Minor punted the ball three times, and on each a touchdown was secured by Ballard. Then Stevens forced the ball down to the centre of the field but Ballard caught it and made a free kick. This was well fielded and a good scrimmage ensued. Then Brotherlin got the ball, but was held within one foot of the line between the goals. The great fight of the day took place, the full team being engaged. Finally Devereux got the ball and secured another touchdown before time was called.

The ball was kicked off by Stevens and was well worked up toward the Princeton goal; but by fine running and passing was soon brought to the centre of the field. Herrick made a fine run, but being captured, a touchdown was secured by Loney. McNair failed to kick the ball over, but Lee came to the rescue and secured another touchdown before the Stevens men could reach him. On its return by Lee, McNair kicked it over making another goal. Then after the players were ready, Devereux took the ball and made a fine run. A scrimmage took place within four feet of the goal line, where Stevens held, but soon Bradford ran around the end for a touchdown and later Waller made the last score of the game by a beautiful run.

3—Touchdown, Princeton (Devereux). 4—Touchdown, Princeton (McDermott; no goal by McNair. 5—Goal by Cutts. 6—Touchdown by Princeton (McLaren); goal by McNair. 7—Goal by Penn. (Lee).

The return game was played with the University of Pennsylvania on the grounds of the Germantown Cricket Club on Nov. 9. During this game Lee scored the only touchdown made against Princeton during the season. Frequent tries for goals from the field were made, and in general a kicking game was played. After two or three scrimmages Brotherlin got the ball in his arms, and by successful dodging got it through the Pennsylvania half backs, and, getting aid from Cutts, made a touchdown in five minutes. After that, the ball was kept going pretty actively, and half a dozen scrimmages ensued in as many minutes, always resulting favorably for Princeton, who kept the ball well down toward the Pennsylvania goal posts. All efforts to push it over were resisted with desperation, and it was only when Lee slipped, after making a good run into mid-field, that McDermott, aided by Ballard and McAlpin, and with only Harrah to oppose, made the second touchdown. The next play was all in favor of Princeton, and the ball went hurtling down to Hance, who would have held it when he caught it, and thereby have had a five kick, but Devereux made a great jump, and tackled Hance. Then followed a grand scrimmage, with fourteen men, seven from each side, until at last McLaren got the ball out for a touchdown just before time was called. For ten minutes of the second half the battle waged furiously, with the ball in the middle of the field, but the discipline of the Princeton men prevailed, and the game drifted slowly down to the Pennsylvania goal. Every advantage that Pennsylvania got by some good kick or run, the Princeton men counteracted by skillful play. For half an hour Princeton did not score a touchdown, though Pennsylvania was forced to make at least a dozen safeties. Finally Brotherlin got the ball, and, dodging through the forwards, sent the half backs tumbling head over heels, and dodging the full backs, reached the goal just as Lee tackled, and the ball was down four inches from the line. On the next play Brotherlin carried it over. When play was resumed Cutts received the ball nearly in the middle of the field, and sent a drop-kick through the goal posts. Another touchdown for Princeton was scored by McDermott; then McNair kicked the second goal from the field. Just before time was called Lee scored the only point for Pennsylvania by a good goal from the field.

On Nov. 16 the Princeton team went to Cambridge to play Harvard.

Touchdown by Princeton (Loney).

Warren kicked off well for Harvard. By dint of Harvard's frequent kicking and the Princeton attempt to run, the ball was forced back very near the Princeton goal, and Cutts was compelled to kick. It was still further advanced by Minor, and in a fumble near Harvard's goal, Loney and Sedgwick both fell on the ball, but the umpire decided in favor of Loney, and Princeton had scored a touchdown. McNair attempted to kick, but missed a difficult goal, for the ball went over the top of the post.

The opening of the second half was filled with kicking, but soon Princeton was forced to touchdown for safety three times. Wetherbee made good runs for Harvard, passing everyone until he reached Withington who stopped him each time; while for Princeton McNair made the run of the game, being downed three yards from Harvard's goal. He tried a goal from the field but failed. Harvard was now forced to touchdown for safety. Again and again was this repeated, until finally Wetherbee kicked the ball out of danger. Harvard made a last desperate, but unsuccessful attempt to cross Princeton goal line before time was called. The teams were evenly matched and if Harvard possessed any advantage in point of weight it was counterbalanced by the superior agility and skill of the Princeton team. Harvard touched down for safety, five times; Princeton, four times.

That night a huge bonfire was lighted and fireworks were sent off. Then the students began to cheer—three for the man that got the touchdown, three for the team that had the man that got the touchdown; three for the college that had the team, etc.; three for the Prex that had the college, etc.

Fully two thousand people braved the mud and inclement weather on Thanksgiving Day to witness the Yale game at Hoboken. The game was closely played throughout and it would be difficult to imagine a more exciting contest. Yale outweighed Princeton team but were excelled in activeness. Her running and kicking was fully equal to that of Princeton, but her discipline and mode of defence proved inferior. In the great rushes toward the close of the game the Princetonians bore them down by sheer momentum and when Yale sought to close up her ranks to resist the attacks, she found her men scattered. Several bad muffs on the part of Yale, added not a little to her discomfiture.

Touchdown by Princeton (Withington); goal by McNair.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY PRINCETON.

Camp kicked off for Yale, and kicks were several times exchanged. After Princeton had twice touched down for safety, Camp made a beautiful run, but his foot slipped on the soft mud, and he went sprawling head over heels, followed by half a dozen of both teams. After the men arose, they resembled a tug-of-war team after a close contest in a loamy soil. Their neat, white trousers were plastered with dark mud, and their hands and caps were liberally bespattered. After a run by Thompson, Camp tried for a goal from the thirty-five yard line, but it went to one side, and Princeton was again forced to touchdown for safety. A skillful drop-kick by Cutts sent the ball spinning into the northeast corner, near Yale's goal, where Yale was forced to make a touchdown for safety. Camp made another run, but was downed by Waller. McNair made a long drop-kick, which Yale returned, and the first half of 45 minutes came to a close, after Princeton had made another touchdown for safety.

In the first half Princeton played a cautious, defensive game, touching down for safety five times. Yale played a rougher and more reckless game; their forwards were frequently offside, leaving their backs unprotected.

In the second half a change was noticeable in Princeton's playing. The nervousness which the men had showed in the earlier part of the game passed away, and they displayed great energy and determination. After brilliant runs by McNair, Cutts and Withington, McNair tried for a goal from the field. It fell to one side, and Yale, fumbling it, Loney fell on it, behind Yale's goal line. Yale claimed a foul, and the referee decided that the ball should be brought back, and put into play where he had last seen it, a few feet from the line. McNair kicked again, and Yale was forced to make a touchdown for safety. Some time later Withington, aided by the splendid interference of Brotherlin, made a touchdown, from which McNair kicked the goal. Camp kicked off, and once again it was forced down to Princeton's goal. Had Yale followed up the attack with her old spirit and discipline, it looked as though she would surely gain a goal. As it was, there was an instant when the honors threatened to be evenly divided; but McNair made a touchdown for safety, and the whole Princeton team struggled with a persistency and discipline which there was no overcoming. A variety of runs, rushes and scrimmages followed, and the call of time was all that saved Yale from a greater defeat. The score stood, 1 goal to 0 in favor of Princeton, and Princeton was undisputed Intercollegiate Champion.

The younger graduates would be greatly amused by the protest of the Princetonian against the Football Association for paying three hundred dollars for "the few wretchedly tended square feet of Jersey mud for two short hours." In 1896 ten thousand dollars was paid for the afternoon's use of Manhattan Field,

The season closed with the game of the Sophomores with the Columbia Sophomores on November 30 at Hoboken, in which Columbia was defeated by the then marvellous score of 6 goal and 10 touchdowns to 0, which was the largest score up to that date that had ever been made in a match game.

The kick-off by Pennsylvania was blocked, and the ball followed down the field, until McNair kicked a goal from the field. Ten minutes later Horton scored the first touchdown, but McNair missed the try-at-goal, and Pennsylvania touched down for safety. After an exchange of kicks, the ball was carried down the field by McNair and McDermott, and within ten minutes McAlpin had crossed the goal line for Princeton's second touchdown, from which McNair kicked the goal. Duncan secured a free kick, but on a long drop-kick missed the goal by a few inches; Pennsylvania made a touchdown for safety, and then kicked. When Pennsylvania muffed Cutts' return kick, Loney fell on the ball for the third touchdown, from which McNair kicked the goal. McNair caught the kick-off, ran the ball back into Pennsylvania's territory, and kicked another goal from the field.

Ballard kicked off in the second half, and after a good run secured the ball himself. A high kick by Cutts' enabled Peace to get the ball, and when tackled, he passed the ball to Devereux, who made the fourth touchdown for Princeton. Good playing by Princeton secured four more touchdowns, and McNair kicked another goal, but as the ball had been touched in its course by a Pennsylvania man, the goal was not counted. In the second half M. R. Ely, '82, played in the place of H. McAlpin, '80.

3—Goal from field by Ballard. 4—Goal from field by Cutts. 5—Touchdown by Princeton.

Princeton kicked off. After the ball was started the vigorous efforts of the Columbia men forced it down toward Princeton's goal. The playing of Princeton was for a while very loose, and there was a great deal too much careless fumbling with the ball, so that once or twice it looked as if Columbia would carry it through. But fine runs by Farr and Cutts carried the ball back up the field and a touchdown was secured. After some hard fighting Peace rushed through the crowd and scored another touchdown. When sides had been changed and the ball sent off, the tactics of the Columbia team seemed to have changed. In the first half they fought hard to win a touchdown or a goal; in the second they seemed contented to prevent Princeton from scoring. They touched down for safety at least ten times and made no more runs worth mentioning. Princeton on the contrary played much better. When the ball was carried down toward Columbia's goal Ballard caught it and by a very difficult drop-kick won a goal, and soon after by some excellent running and passing by Princeton, Cutts dropped another goal from the field. There was only time enough for Ballard to rush in and secure another touchdown before the game was ended.

On Nov. 8 Stevens Institute visited Princeton and suffered an overwhelming defeat.

The game was full of kicks; for the first few minutes the ball flew from one end of the field to the other, until finally Stevens touched down for safety. Then McNair got the ball on the kick-off and scored the first touchdown of the game. Then Cutts made a long run, and when tackled passed the ball to Lee who was downed two feet from the goal line. Stevens held well but at last the weight of the Princeton rushers carried the ball over and McNair kicked the goal. On the kick-off McNair ran the ball back, then Brotherlin carried it over for another touchdown from which McNair kicked a goal. Before the half closed Stevens had carried the ball down into Princeton territory, only to be forced back for three touchdowns for safety.

Early in the second half two touchdowns and one goal were secured. Then Ely caught the ball on a kick-off and ran through the whole team for a touchdown, from which McNair kicked a goal. Stevens kicked off again and Peace seized the ball. He did not stop to kick it but he put one hundred and ninety pounds in motion in the direction of the enemy's goal. They tried to stop him, but he was under motion and going down hill. They dropped right and left, one at a time, like ten-pins in an alley. Over two-thirds of the distance to the goal Peace had run and then he was attacked by three men. Yet he carried them and struggled toward the goal line. When almost there, panting he had to yield. But the ball was forced over the line in a minute and a touchdown was won. McNair kicked the goal. Once more the players faced each other, and again Peace tucked the ball under his arm, and ran nearly to Stevens' goal line, where there was a scrimmage. Pracy suffered a

"I'm only dizzy," said Pracy, and in a moment he was hard at work again. Out of the scrimmage Cutts got the ball, and by a drop-kick made the seventh goal for Princeton. McNair completed the score by a touchdown from the kick-off.

The first game of the championship series was played with Harvard at Hoboken, on Nov. 15. The first half was remarkable for long kicks; the second for skilful passing and tackling.

Goal from field by McNair; 25 mins.

Warren kicked off for Harvard, and the ball was soon returned to centre field, where Harvard was at once thrown on the defence, and played very cautiously, though her men outweighed the Princetonians eight pounds per man. Kicks were exchanged, McNair, making a free catch; Cutts tried a place-kick, which forced Harvard to makethe first touchdown for safety. This same play was repeated, and after an exchange of kicks was repeated a third time. In the kick out that followed, Brotherlin passed the ball to McNair, who punted, and Harvard was a fourth time forced to make a safety. Soon Cutts returned it, and Harvard made the fifth touchdown for safety. With the wind in their favor, Princeton kicked upon every opportunity. They were playing what was for them a careless game, frequently losing the ball through fumbling and reckless passing. Twenty-five minutes after the game opened, Withington passed the ball to McNair, who kicked a goal from the field. Both the referee and Harvard objected to the Princeton manner of "guarding," which was immediately changed; this caused some confusion and, as a result, Princeton was forced to make two safeties.

When a down had been scored it was amusing to the spectators to watch the preparations for the rush. The men ranged themselves in lines as near as they could, without an actual touch, with hands and knees and heads bent down, ready with a push and rush to set off after the ball. A little Princeton rusher surprised one of the big Harvard men at one rush, by suddenly ducking down, diving beneath his legs, and leaving for the giant's clutches as they came down to grab him, only the wind of flying heels a dozen feet away. One of the Cushings at one time had secured the ball under his arm, and set off on a zig-zag run, dodging and feinting, when a Princeton man set himself fairly in his track. To stretch out an arm was to invite a fatal grip, and, hugging the ball with both arms, and with his head thrown down,

Cushing took an effective and a violent method of clearing the track, leaving a doubled up Princetonian holding his stomach on the grass ten feet away.

With the wind in their faces in the second half the Princeton tactics were changed completely, and kicking was seldom resorted to; they were satisfied to retain their existing advantage. Harvard tried a kicking game, but Princeton's forwards broke through, and blocked the kicks, except once. By means of Withington's quick passing and short but repeated runs of Cutts, McNair, Ballard and Withington, the ball was carried two-thirds of the length of the field. At last, when a touchdown was almost within their grasp, a couple of careless plays by Princeton lost the ball and Bacon's long kick again transferred the play to their goal. Twice again was the ball forced back to the centre of the field, only to be returned by a long kick. Here two attempts at goals from the field were made, but both were blocked. The game was an unusually pleasant and gentlemanly one, entirely free from squabbles and quarrels. Harvard's play, except at the start, was very strong and steady, her men being powerful tacklers and remarkably active for "heavy weights." The Princeton men lacked steadiness, but excelled in knowledge of the game, discipline and skill in passing.

The great game with Yale on Thanksgiving Day was a draw. Neither side scored a point, though Yale had one opportunity, and Princeton several excellent opportunities for doing so. Both teams constantly played off-side, and relied apparently on winning by a chance error of their opponents, rather than by any skilful playing of their own. The Princeton tackling was strong, while Yale throttled viciously. Almost no runs were made, and very little passing was done. The few minutes which remained over and above the scrimmaging, quarreling, and fighting, were occupied with the long kicks of the half backs.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY PRINCETON.

Yale won the toss and took advantage of the wind and sun. Ballard kicked off and Yale rushed it back. Two drop-kicks by Camp forced the ball down into Princeton territory and Princeton was forced to make a touchdown for safety. Before the half closed Princeton made two other touchdowns for safety.

Camp took the ball for the kick-off on the second half but gave it to Harding who dribbled it. In the rushing and tackling which ensued the ball was forced to Princeton's ground. Princeton got a chance for a good kick and away went the ball close to the Yale goal posts. But it fell short and Yale fumbled. The tackling was very severe and when a scrimmage occurred it was difficult to get the ball more than a few feet away, no chance being afforded for any successful passing by Yale, so well did the Princeton rushers—ably directed by Captain Ballard—attend to their arduous work of keeping the Yale heavyweights from forcing their way through the Princeton ranks. Time after time was the ball kicked or rushed into "in touch" only to be worked out with great difficulty. When this was done by a Princeton player in Yale ground he would step the fifteen paces out from the side and trust to the result of a scrimmage. But when Yale had the ball in touch in her own ground she had to be content with a throw-out or a quick pass. Yale sustained her reputation (of the time) for ungentlemanliness on the field, by throttling, foul tackling and loud talking. But an evident determination on the part of Princeton to put up with nothing having the least semblance of foul play, cooled her ardor.

After twenty minutes struggle in the last half, during which the battle had been mostly in the centre of the field, Princeton began to drive their adversaries back on to their own ground and on a drop-kick by McNair the ball was sent flying towards the Yale goal. But the referee declared it "no goal" as it had only gone over the post and not within. A touchdown for safety followed and Yale was thrown again on the defensive. The game was delayed by an attempt to replace some of the Yale players with fresh men, contrary to the rules. Then Yale carried the ball down field until Princeton was forced to make another touchdown for safety. As time was called Princeton was advancing the play into Yale's territory.

Of this period H. M. Cutts, '80, writes:

"Immediately after this season, the style of play changed to a very great extent both at Princeton and the other colleges of the league. A retrospective analysis of the game during the past twenty-four years shows three distinct periods in which style and strategy greatly differed.

"During the four years just reviewed and for a few years later, the game was essentially a football game. The ball was kicked frequently by the 'forwards,' more frequently by the 'half-backs' and invariably by the 'backs.' And what kicking! high if with the wind, low if against it; out of bounds as far as possible from the kicker if time was to be gained; the place-kick for the goal from anywhere short of centre field, but above all the hurtling drop-kick, now a lost art, which sent the ball yards farther than can any punt. The ball was kicked from the ground either while dead or on the move, without touching it with the hands. In a press it was punted with either foot and not infrequently the kicker facing his opponents' goal, sent it for a good gain over his head towards his own posts. No one feared to kick and, in part, because of the kicking there was more running than now.

"The second period began in 1884, when the game became more and more a scrimmage game. There were brilliant kickers in the early 'eighties but the style of the game had changed materially, and for ten years or so a punt or place-kick was rarely seen and drop-kicking not at all. The teams having been cut down from fifteen to eleven men a new disposition of the players became necessary and each position was given a name. Expert advisers appeared. Strategy prepared beforehand was executed on the field, and tricks previously rehearsed in secret were sprung by each team upon the other. 'Interference' ahead of the ball, which was formerly off-side play, was permitted, and was the chief method of ground gaining by means of short rushes. The men played huddled together and for minutes at a time the ball could barely be seen.

"During the past five or six years the game has gradually assumed still another aspect. Mass plays are still much used but the present undergraduate who hardly knew anything about kicking the ball while at school is now treated to an occasional punt at which he cheers vociferously. One hears occasionally of a goal place-kicked or even drop-kicked from the field, but neither kick is as yet much used and the revival of a lost art has only just begun. However it is plain to see that the style of the game has again changed, and this is the third period of which the writer spoke—a renaissance of the first period grafted upon the mediæval.

"A team of fifteen men was disposed as follows upon a field. There were eight 'forwards' spread in a straight line equi-distant across somewhat wider bounds than now. Then four 'half backs' and three 'backs,' at equi-intervals straight across the field, each end man being a short distance inside the side lines. (The Princeton backs, however, were disposed at the points of a flat triangle the centre back playing what might be termed 'three-quarter back').

"Set opposite this team a similarly disposed, though in reverse order, team and let us play a game of old style Rugby. A team uniformed in orange jerseys and stockings and black caps and knee-breeches, is behind the ball. On some of the players a big black 'P' on the chest is covered by a short sleeved, light canvas jacket tightly laced around the body and neck. This is the original 'Smock' or canvas jacket invented at Princeton.

"The oval ball rests at an angle of 45° in the exact centre of the field. The opposing forwards are fifteen yards in front of it, the offensive team a yard or so to rear of it.

"The chosen kicker-off has measured his distance to the rear and stands ready for a running kick. A strong wind is blowing slantingly against him.

"The referee shouts 'all ready!' 'play!' The kicker-off makes at the ball as if he expected to kick it into the next state, but he has only touched it with his foot, to put it in play, he stoops and picks it up and running at his adversaries jumps into their arms in an insane manner. But he has passed the ball to a following forward and he, in turn to a close up half back and a good run around the end is secured for the orange. The half back is spilled and 'held' and holds the ball close upon the ground lest he put it in play by lifting it or taking his hands off of it. Both lines of forwards line up. Holding or 'intentional' interference are not allowed but the opposing sides are elbowing and shuffling each other like good ones. The ball is snapped back as now and a quick-as-a-flash half-back (practically quarter back) has passed it to a friend, and a low punt sends it a good distance towards his goal.

"The forwards have changed, but an opponent has the ball and it comes back high and far with the wind. An orange back on the run picks it up, and while still under way, with a drop-kick sends it end over end diagonally out of bounds.

"The other side easily secure it and five or six of their forwards line up where the ball crossed the side line. A yard in front, man for man, are the orange men. The gain for the orange is slight, but something, but the enemy has the ball.

"A quick little opponent now takes position with the ball at the end of his forwards. One foot is over the line in bounds, the other foot is out of bounds. He is thus technically out of bounds and may not be tackled. To put the ball in play it must be thrown straight in bounds. Of course the little chap astride the line intends to get the ball into the hands of one of his own side and he makes obvious preparations to hurl it to his chosen man in his line. Quick as a flash he has ducked, lifted up the foot out of bounds, bounced the ball in bounds in front of him and passed it between his legs to a waiting half back. Now a kick with the wind high and far and the orange backs are at work again but do not gain by punting against the wind. The other side get the ball and a player tucks the leather under one arm and charges the orange lines. Tackling must strictly be above the waist. The runner with the ball with his free hand sweeps back of him the outstretched hands of his assailants and they fall prone upon the ground. He is finally stopped by weight of numbers, but the ball is not 'held,' for grasped in one great hand it is high above his head, and he throws it to his friends in his rear.

"An orange lad is on the lookout for this. He is too quick for the enemy and in a jiffy he is racing through the thinned line of his opponents. Down he ducks under outstretched hands, here he changes his course, and his enemy slides by; here he sweeps aside a craning claw, but an opponent too many has leaped upon his back and down they go with a great gain for the orange. Now the orange team try a series of passes and runs. In the scrimmages the forwards may not run ahead of the ball, so they stand fast and let the opposing line break itself upon them. Through the gap thus formed darts the orange captain, and nearer and nearer comes the goal. There is a fumble; the enemy has the leather and from out the crowd up it goes into the air. An orange back is on hand and as he catches it he digs his heel into the ground. He is fairly in front of his goal posts and wants a try for a goal.

"The opposing forwards come up to the heel mark and spread out. The orange line evens up with the placer of the ball, for a place-kick is to be tried. (A drop-kick by the player who caught the ball might also be played). The kick is a failure, for the wind has turned the ball from the goal posts, but the enemy are obliged to touchdown for safety.

"Back twenty paces from the goal line go the orange forwards. Further back are the half-backs and about midfield are the backs. The orange have gained something since the start, but the enemy has the ball.

"A drop-kick down the wind hurtles the leather to an orange back. He runs up until he nearly meets the enemy and then punts diagonally across the field gaining as much from a slanting wind as possible.

"Once more the orange have the ball close to their goal line. The enemy has put his half-backs in his front line and is holding for all he is worth, but suddenly from out the mass, with scant room and scant time, an orange half back has drop-kicked the ball over the bar and Princeton scores.

"Thus the games were waged with far more action than with the present style. I have an account of a game with Yale in which forty-seven kicks of various kinds were recorded and only twenty-nine scrimmages in the two forty-five minute halves. To the kicking more than anything else may be ascribed the open order of the play and yet there were no larger scores made than at present.

"There was really very little strategy in the games of those days. A double pass, a fake pass and the tactics at the side line as above described constituted nearly all the prearranged movements. These were accomplished mostly without signaling of any kind and put in play by the quick wit of the player.

"As for the method of training a Princeton team in the late 'seventies of the past century, there is not much to be said. We used to practise for an hour at noon and run at a jog trot from one-half to three-quarters of an hour in the late afternoon. At first not many men could be got to face the 'Varsity at the new game. Finally the crowd of self-sacrificing volunteers got to be so great that sheer weight of numbers prevented good play by the University team, so that the 'scrubs' were limited to twice as many players as 'Varsity men on the field. No training table existed and while each man was cautioned never to go to excess in the pleasures of life, he was otherwise allowed to do as he liked. In 1879, the whole college criticized the members of the team for smoking; and gradually it was abandoned during the season. We had no 'faculty and graduate committee,' no 'head coach,' no 'chief trainer,' and no 'rubbers.' We obeyed the captain who, with the advice of a board of directors, picked the team of his choice from among the candidates and stationed the players where he pleased.

"Whether such training would carry a team through a game as now played may be doubted. It was certainly sufficient for what it was intended, for on no occasion do I remember a player being removed for exhaustion as I lately have frequently seen done. Of course there were injuries and substitutes were not infrequently put in, substitutes just as eager to get hurt in turn as to eat their dinner.

"It must have been a far more interesting style of play to watch than, at any rate, the 'medieval' game. More men on the field, kicking to keep them scattered and in motion, the field unencumbered every minute or two with trainers bringing water and advice from the side lines, much more running and dodging and the same amount of partisanship to keep cold chills running up and down the watcher's back."

As soon as the fall term opened the men interested in football began a serious discussion concerning the number of men on a team. One year earlier Princeton had desired fifteen; but this year Princeton voted with the majority in the Association for eleven men on a team, thinking that there would be less likelihood of the game resulting in a draw if the number was reduced to eleven. The game with eleven is not only more scientific but much more attractive; with fifteen, weight and strength are of great importance, but with eleven agility and fast running come into play.

For the first time in its history the Association was on such good financial condition that the students were not called upon for a subscription.

The first match of the season was against Stevens on Oct. 23. Several games had been arranged earlier but for various reasons were not played.

Stevens won the toss and chose the western goal, having the wind at their backs. Loney kicked off for Princeton, and the ball was rushed back and forth for a short while, Bradford and Chetwood making some long runs and fine dodges. The ball was kept within the twenty-five yard line the entire time, and in eight minutes from the start Stevens was forced to make its first safety touchdown. The ball was kicked out and almost as soon returned by Farr. After a short scrimmage Peace appeared with the ball, securing the first touchdown for Princeton. Princeton began now to warm up. Their passing was admirable and their runs long and telling. Stevens played a good defensive game but it was plain that they could do nothing with Princeton. Touchdown followed touchdown until at the end of the first half the score stood, Princeton three goals and four touchdowns to Stevens nothing.

In the second half Princeton had the wind in her favor and the playing was transferred to the other end of the field. Stevens braced but could not hold the opposing heavyweights. Princeton never allowed the ball to pass her twenty-five yard line during the half and added two more touchdowns and three goals to her score.

University of Penn—Goals, 0; Touchdowns, 0; Safeties, 1.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Loney; no goal; 10 mins.

The small score of the University of Pennsylvania game was due to the fact that Pennsylvania sent up the strongest team that she ever had and Princeton played with five substitutes. The touchdown was made by Loney who secured the ball on a fumble in the middle of the field, and run the whole length closely pursued by all of Pennsylvania's team. Farr made some telling runs but owing to the slippery condition of the ground, he fell and dislocated his arm at the elbow and was laid off for the rest of the season. Allen took his place.

The fortune of Princeton seemed reversed, and slowly but surely, Pennsylvania worked the ball up the field toward the Princeton goal never losing it nor attempting to kick. But as the ball crossed the goal line, the fight grew more determined and Pennsylvania forced back down to the middle of the field by the powerful rushing of Princeton's forwards. In the second half Allen and Riggs carried the ball within a few feet of the goal-line but Pennsylvania secured it on a fumble.

The first important game of the season was against Harvard on Nov. 13. The Princeton men were heavier and larger than their opponents and proved themselves admirable runners and experts in passing the ball. But for the first half the Harvard team kept its prestige and outplayed its antagonists. The Harvard men seemed lacking in staying qualities, however, as in the last half they seemed to become demoralized. One unpleasant feature of the game was the frequent disputes which apparently arose from an imperfect knowledge of the game.

Keith kicked off for Harvard and the ball was fumbled and secured by Harvard on Princeton's twenty-five yard line. Princeton secured the ball on a foul but was forced to make a safety. The kick out was blocked and another safety was made. The play was then transferred to centre field where Harlan kicked and Edmunds fumbling, Loney secured the ball and almost unopposed made a touch-down, from which Winton kicked a goal. A foul was claimed—in fact there were more disputes and discussions in this match than have occurred in all the matches thus far. The crowd rushed on the field and it was fully five minutes before the game could proceed.

Kicks were now exchanged which forced the ball close to Princeton's goal. Keith kicked but the ball bounced on a spectator and was secured by Atkinson playing offside, who touched it down behind the Princeton goal. Nevertheless the referee allowed the touchdown and a goal was kicked, tying the score. Princeton renewed the contest with so much vigor that Harvard was forced to make several safeties. Peace and Bryan were forced to retire, and Riggs and Flint took their place. Harvard's tackling was so strong that Princeton lost the ball in nearly every scrimmage. Morgan gained a great deal of ground for Princeton which was lost by Keith's long kicks. Devereux was disabled, but all three, Peace, Devereux and Bryan returned for the second half. Harvard now had the wind in her favor, and compelled Princeton to resort to another safety. From this time on Princeton seemed to wake up to a due sense of her responsibility and accordingly transferred the playing to the immediate neighborhood of Harvard's goal, where it stayed until the close of the game. Occasionally by Keith's magnificent kicks, and the powerful rushing of Perrin and Houston, the ball would be carried to the centre of the field but it was as surely forced back again. Peace scored a touchdown but it was not allowed by the referee, who claimed that McKee had fouled the ball in passing it back. All fears of the game ending in a draw were dispelled by Winton, who made another touchdown, and despite the angle and the darkness, kicked a goal. When time was called, Princeton had the ball ten feet from the Harvard goal line, Princeton showed her reserve strength by pressing Harvard hardest at the close of the game, but the team passed the ball indifferently and lost it too frequently.

The long and severe struggle for the football championship was ended on Thanksgiving Day at the Polo Grounds, in a draw game. The snow had to be removed from the field, leaving the ground covered with a hard, slippery coating, that rendered skilful playing impossible. While Yale's heavyweights (Yale 105 lbs., Princeton 150) could not get under way so quickly, neither could Princeton's swift runners, and quick dodging was out of the question.

NO CHAMPIONSHIP AWARDED.

Princeton won the toss and took advantage of the wind. In the exchange of kicks at the opening of the game, the ball was forced down to the Yale goal and Yale made a safety touchdown. This was immediately followed by another. This kicking was kept up, Harlan's long and telling kicks being the feature of the first half. Camp made a beautiful and telling run and Princeton was forced to make several safeties; only to be followed by three safeties from Yale.

For the first fifteen minutes of the second half, the snow fell rapidly but the play continued and few of the large audience left the field. Winton kicked off for Princeton and Camp returned it. Peace blocked a kick and Morgan secured the ball. He would undoubtedly have scored if he had not slipped on starting to run, for he was within twenty-five feet of the Yale goal and with a clear field. Yale was forced to touchdown for safety. After the kick out by Camp, some good passing, tackling and rushing was done on both sides, but Princeton forced Yale to make another safety. It was now difficult to do any good running from the slippery condition of the ground, and with the snow on the ball that also became difficult to hold. After some twenty minutes of struggling between one side and then the other on the centre of the field, Yale got the best of Princeton, forcing the ball down into Princeton territory where half a dozen safeties were made in fifteen minutes play.

Princeton saw that they had to work carefully and to keep the ball down as much as possible; and therefore after their scrimmages their quarter back generally tried a rush instead of a kick and in the mauls which followed, they managed to retain possession of the ball. Towards the close Yale forced Princeton to the twenty-five yard line where scrimmage followed scrimmage, with only a foot or two gained. Here it was when time was called and the game a draw. Princeton had made eleven and Yale six touchdowns for safety.

In the first half Princeton undoubtedly outplayed their opponents and on two occasions came within an ace of scoring. In the last fifteen minutes of the second half, their game was characterized by as skilful an exhibition of defensive play as had ever been seen on the football field. By good kicks Yale had forced the ball down into the Princeton territory where the Princeton chargers were unable on account of the slippery condition of the ground to break through and block Yale's attempt at goals from the field. So it was thought best to retain possession of the ball.

Princeton vs. Columbia.

At Princeton, Nov. 20, 1880.

Game forfeited to Princeton; Columbia failed to appear.

The last game of the season was to have been played with Columbia at Princeton, but the day was stormy and the Columbia men did not appear. Princeton claimed the game by forfeit and after investigation the referee granted it. Princeton was willing to play another game later but the weather prevented. According to the games of this one season, Princeton was tied for the championship with Yale, each having won two games and fought a draw with the others. Consequently no championship was awarded for the year, but Princeton was acknowledged champion, as she had not been beaten since the fall of 1877.

At least half of the members of last year's team had left college and a new set of players had to be developed, though every effort was made to put forth a strong team. Yale was sending out discouraging reports but Harvard had the strongest team of years.

The first game against Rutgers revealed unexpected strength in the rush line, but great want of unity and method among the backs, and the need of practising in passing and goal kicking. The team was severely criticized but the members had not settled down to any regular training.

2d Half. 4—Touchdowns by Princeton.

Pennsylvania opened the game by dribbling, but failed to gain any ground. Good running and passing by Haxall, Riggs and Bickham carried the ball to Pennsylvania's twenty-five yard line, where Peace received it and by skilful dodging scored a touchdown. The ball was scarcely put in play when Riggs made a good run, and when tackled, he passed it skilfully to Baker, who brought it within ten yards of the goal. Then Bickham carried it over. Two runs by Baker and Haxall gave another touchdown. In the second half, through some careless work by Princeton, Pennsylvania secured the ball near the Princeton goal. Though Pennsylvania put up a stout aggressive game, the Princeton forwards held until the backs secured the ball and made several touchdowns.

1—Goal from field by Peace. 2—Touchdown by Benton. 3—Touchdown by Harlan.

A very exciting game was played with the University of Michigan, which proved to be the strongest team that Princeton had met this season. Early in the first half Peace fumbled, then to retrieve himself, he kicked a goal from the field. For the remainder of the half Michigan retained the ball in her own territory, frequently making safety touchdowns. In the opening of the second half Michigan forced the ball down field and touch it down behind the Princeton goal, but the point was not allowed as the runner had gone out of bounds. Princeton was forced to make a safety. Then slowly Princeton carried the ball up the field and before the half closed two touchdowns had been scored.

On the very next day the University of Pennsylvania played a return game at Princeton which showed up Princeton's weakness in punting and goal kicking. However a large score was made by running.

It was evident, from the first, that Princeton had a decided advantage over their opponents, and during this half, with the exception of a few minutes toward the end, they held the ball near Pennsylvania's goal. Three touchdowns were made by Princeton in the first twenty minutes, but each time the attempt at goal failed. After the kick-out from the third try-at-goal Pennsylvania secured the ball, and retained possession of it for some time by steady playing, working it well out to the centre of the field. But it was recaptured by Princeton and long runs by Harlan and Peace gained another touchdown. As the latter was made near the edge of the field, Bryan punted out to Peace and Haxall kicked the first goal. Soon after this a beautiful run by Perot carried the fight up to the Princeton twenty-five yard line and the half closed with the ball in Pennsylvania's possession. In the second half after another of Perot's long runs Princeton took possession of the ball and held it almost continuously for the remainder of the game. Within five minutes Haxall had touched down behind their line and kicked another goal. Another unsuccessful dribble, a series of good runs by Harlan, Peace and Baker, and Haxall had made another touchdown and kicked the third goal. The remainder of the game was merely a succession of good runs or passes on the part of Princeton, with scarcely enough work on the side of Princeton to make it interesting. Three more touchdowns were made, the last of which resulted in a goal. During this half the playing of Princeton was very commendable, with little fumbling and much good running and passing.

1—Place kick by Harlan.

The game with Rutgers on Nov. 10 consisted of two thirty minute halves. The first half was filled with a succession of good plays on both sides, and a beautiful series of runs by Bryan, McNair and Peace. McNair got a free kick almost in the centre of the field and held it for Harlan who sent the ball squarely between the posts. In the second half there was a marked absence of the old game of rushing the ball, because the captain wished to test the individual play of the new men.

In the game of Nov. 12 Columbia made a plucky fight, though there was no opportunity for brilliant play. It was a babying game. Princeton fought her way slowly, relying chiefly on the superior weight of her men.

1—Touchdown by Princeton; no goal; 35 mins. 2—Touchdown by Haxall; no goal; no goal. 3—Touchdown by Princeton; goal.

The game started in a pouring rain which kept up the entire afternoon. Peace opened the game with a rush and in ten minutes Haxall claimed a touchdown which was not allowed. But a few minutes later Harlan scored. The rain had obliterated the lines and there was much discussion over the position of the bounds. Harlan attempted to kick a goal but the ball was decided to have gone too high. Then there was a scrimmage in a puddle, and after a dozen men had dived into its depths, a feeble cry was heard from below, "For heaven's sake, don't drown a fellow." Just before time was called Harlan secured another touchdown from which he kicked a goal.

On Nov. 19 Princeton played the best game of the season with Harvard. Princeton had the heavier team but Harvard possessed greater skill. In the first half Princeton's superior brawn gave her the advantage and she forced the fighting, compelling Harvard to play a defensive game which was very skillfully done. But in the second half Princeton's heavyweights showed signs of fatigue and Harvard's passing and running turned the tables. Princeton was forced to take the defensive; the ball was near their goal but Harvard did not score.

touched the ball down behind the Harvard goal line. But he was called back on the claim of a foul. Several scrimmages were held on Harvard's ten-yard line; then Harvard punted, Princeton returned, and the Harvard back was thrown behind his goal for a safety. Then Manning's long kicks transferred the play to the other end of the field where Henry tried to place-kick a goal from the field. Again the attempt was made, but it struck a policeman instead of going between the posts. Before the half closed another attempt was made, but it was blocked by the Princeton forwards.

Bryan opened the second half with a kick and soon Harlan caught the ball and tried for a goal from the Harvard twenty-five yard line, but missed. The fine rushing of Harlan, Bryan and Peace, with Riggs' catches, were met by Harvard's splendid passing from one side of the field to the other, and her admirable running. A long kick by Edmunds sent the ball to Princeton's goal limit. The ends were close behind and Shaw was forced to make a safety. For ten minutes the admirable tackling and rushing of Henry, Manning and Keith kept the ball inside Princeton's twenty-five yard line. Then Peace made a long run and Harlan taking the ball when he was tackled, advanced it to Harvard's twenty-five yard line. A steady fight was waged, but Harvard gradually moved up the field and the half closed with the play on Princeton's twenty-five yard line.

Now the tide turned. The ball was kicked over Princeton's goal line and Harvard was so close upon it that the Princeton back was forced to throw it out of bounds, making a touch-in goal to avoid a safety. A kick by Harlan was caught by Henry. Keith tried for a goal from the field but missed it and Princeton made an uncounted touchdown behind the goal line. Again it was kicked in and Princeton touched it down. When time was called, the referee declared the game a draw as Princeton had made only one touchdown, the others being kicked over. A rule had been adopted in the fall providing, in the case of a draw game, for two extra halves or innings of fifteen minutes each. So the teams resumed play, Princeton still on the defensive, mainly in returning the long Harvard kicks.

It was so dark at the end of fifteen minutes that it was decided to postpone the deciding innings. These, however, were never played.

Princeton, o. Yale, o.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY YALE.

The Thanksgiving game with Yale was one of surprises. Yale was surprised to find that their magnificent rush line, to a man heavier than the Princeton forwards, was unable to accomplish anything against superior agility. Princeton was surprised to find that Yale was quite willing, indeed chose, to play a block game, with the ball in the middle of the field; and nearly every one was surprised to discover that the new rules that were to accomplish so much to prevent a tie, made the very game that should have been the finest of the season, a farce, a continuous tussle, and an utterly uninteresting display of slow, common-place play. There was positively no fine play on either side and only one or two of the players had any chance to show their skill. During the second half for instance, Storrs had the ball more than twenty times, Hull and Badger touched it as often, but no other player was given the ball.

Both teams played warmly from the outset. To Princeton fell the kick-off. Their men fumbled the ball for a few minutes, made an unsuccessful attempt to break through Yale's rushers, and were suddenly bereft of their prize by the holder accidentally dropping it. Yale snatched it and Richards and Camp got two short kicks at it. The wind caught it and down to Princeton's goal line it sailed before dropping. A Princeton player made a touch-in-goal and back to the twenty-five yard line they all went to begin a renewal of the struggle. Again and again Peace and Baker snatched the ball and attempted to break through the line of Yale rushers. It was like butting against a stone wall. Storrs and Lamb were always ready to entwine both arms around the daring adventurer's neck and bring him to a dead halt. Scrimmage followed scrimmage with no other result than changing the scene of the struggle a few feet in either direction. On the extreme end of the line were two figures engaged in a pantomimic display. When the larger man opened wide his legs, the other did the same; when he prepared to bolt in a particular direction the other placed himself directly in his path. They were Lamb and Stone. The latter's sole object in life just now was to thwart every purpose of the heavier Yale man and he clung to him like a leech. Frequently their arms encircled one another's bodies and they lay down in a heap. Then they got up again and smilingly continued their grotesque movements. The struggle went on within Princeton's twenty-five yard line, beyond which it seemed a hopeless task to force it. Peace, however, finally secured a run, but had not got thirty feet away when Lamb shook off his shadow, grappled with the flying fugitive, and Peace plowed headlong over the soft ground. Then Harlan tried a run, and did get as far as the twenty-five yard line before a Yale man shot forward his arms, gripped him firmly by the neck, and choked him off. In the scrimmage a Princeton player lost his temper, made a pass at Hull and throwing up his fists, waited the latter's belligerent advances. Other members, however, stepped in between them. Hisses travelled around the field, which might have been interpreted either as anger at the interference or indignation at the thought of a fight. Camp managed to wrest the ball from Princeton, and the wearers of the orange and the black suddenly grew serious. He hugged the prize to his breast, and hurling himself against the opposing line, tried to hammer his way through the dogged Princeton rushers. Time and again he made the attempt but always in vain. Then Stone snatched the ball from him, and the Princeton boys grew jubilant again. Baker headed for the Yale goal and was the first to run the blockade. He had got well through Yale's rushers at an unexpected point, when Storrs dropped his hand heavily forward and downward, clutched a leg with his fingers and Baker was fast. It had been nothing but pass and handle, and those who had been watching for something like an exhibition of football kicking were growing disappointed. The half ended tamely, so far as play was concerned, though with a wrathful expression from a Princeton man. Storrs had climbed upon his neck and given his head a wrench that was almost paralyzing. "You'll get hurt if you ever do that again," roared he as the giant, smiling sweetly, joined his associates in a bolt for the dressing rooms.

In the second half Storrs was selected to do the greater part of the heavy work. Yale had now to face the freezing wind, and Princeton viewed with satisfaction the prospect of aid from this quarter. Again and again Storrs dodged and attempted to get past the Princeton outposts. He was sent to the ground successively by Captain Bryan, Stone, Baker and Peace. Once he did get his nose past Princeton's line, eight Princeton men buried him, and when he emerged he was bedaubed with mud from head to foot. Princeton was doing some splendid tackling, and was balking her bulky opponents at every point. The scene of the struggle had not shifted a dozen feet from where the half began, when Storrs, with the ball in his arms, shook off one man after another and made a clean run across the field. He had almost reached Princeton's twenty-five yard line when Riggs sprang in his path, got a grapevine twist around the giant's neck and together they took a header to the ground. This was the last effort of interest of the bout. Neither side had thus far made a point, or even scored a safety touchdown.

At 5 o'clock the supplementary innings of fifteen minutes for each team began. Harlan accidentally dropped the ball and Badger dexterously catching it, passed it to his rear where Camp was standing. Yale used her original position again with the wind favoring her and Camp had no difficulty in kicking the ball clear over Princeton's goal line. This was the only telling kick of the game and it was loudly applauded. The inning ended in a scrimmage in which Knapp throttled Peace, and nearly provoked a blow. The next inning was begun in darkness and had not proceeded five minutes when it was decided to call game and declare the result of the long afternoon's contest a draw.

In the entire game there were only half a dozen kicks. Princeton began the block game which lasted all the afternoon and aroused great disgust among the spectators. With the exception of four and a half minutes Princeton kept the ball to the end of the half, Peace and Harlan taking turns bucking the line.

In the second half Yale—Yale who had so strongly opposed fifteen players on a side because it permitted the blocking game—Yale continued the block game and during the whole half, the ball was not kicked nor did Princeton have it in her hands once.

This game gave Yale the championship for 1881, because although neither side had scored in the Yale-Harvard game, Harvard had five safeties and Yale only four.

The spring and fall conventions endeavored to formulate certain new rules to prevent such a "block" game as the Yale game of 1881, when Yale had the ball for only four and a half minutes of the first half and Princeton did not have it at all during the second half. According to the then rules the ball changed hands only when kicked or secured by an opponent on a fumble.

The following resolution was finally adopted: "If on three consecutive fairs and downs a team shall not have advanced the ball five yards or lost ten, they must give the ball up to the other side at the spot where the fourth down was made. Consecutive means, without leaving the hands of the side holding it."

A formal constitution was adopted embodying the former rules and a new one that no man shall play in championship games for more than five seasons.

At this convention Princeton proposed that the men retain certain fixed positions until the ball was put in play, six men in the rush line and the half backs at least ten yards behind them. When the quarter back received the ball he had to pass it at least ten yards. When the half back received it he had a fair chance to make a gain because the rush line was kept equalized and his opponents checked until he started. But objections were raised that this arbitrary arrangement of players would deprive the captains of much of their power and that long delays would occur because the players would not keep their regular positions. This scheme was adopted, however, six years later.

The first game of the season was against a team of graduates, but who though good players individually, played without unity. All of Princeton's touchdowns were made by runs with a few passes, but there was almost no kicking. Kicking is always necessary in a big game and in the second game of the season against Rutgers, there was more practice in punting.

In the Pennsylvania game a free kick, followed by A. Baker's good run, placed the ball inside Pennsylvania's twenty-five yard line, and Flint secured a touchdown, which resulted in a goal. Soon after Haxall was hurt and Belknap took his place. Then Baker, '85, dislocated his shoulder, and Kimball took his place. Good runs by Morgan and Harlan soon brought the ball from the middle of the field, and Baker, '83, made the second touchdown. The ball was punted out to Peace; he passed it to Riggs who ran in and made another touchdown. Four minutes later Morgan made Princeton's fourth touchdown, after a good pass from Baker, '83. Almost immediately Morgan made a long run in a clear field and a touchdown. After several tedious downs Flint seized the ball, which Pennsylvania had fumbled, and scored. The next touchdown was secured by Peace, who ran two-thirds of the field, after a good pass from Flint.

Flint opened the second half with a sharp run and a touchdown. Pennsylvania now took a wonderful brace, played hard and in much better form. For some time the good runs of Remak, Bell and Biddle kept the ball in the centre of the field. Peace made an unsuccessful attempt to kick a goal from the field. After some long kicking on each side, Harlan made a magnificent run, the most brilliant of the game, almost the whole length of the field, and secured the ninth touchdown. After the kick out, Moffat dropped a goal from the field. Two minutes later Peace made a fine run from the middle of the field and another touchdown. The game was finished by Baker's superb run from middle field, ending in a touchdown and goal.

From the very beginning of the Columbia game, Columbia was forced on the defensive and the ball was kept in her territory all the time. Within five minutes from the kick-off Columbia had not only been forced to touch down for safety, but Fleming crossed their goal for Princeton's first score. Before the half ended Princeton had not only scored three more touchdowns but Moffat had kicked a beautiful goal from the field on a free kick. The feature of the Princeton playing was the strategic passing. Whenever a runner was tackled the ball was passed to another Princetonian and long gains made in this manner. In the second half Columbia put in two substitutes, and against the weakened team Princeton scored seven touchdowns from which four goals were kicked.

In the game of November 11, the University of Pennsylvania were completely outclassed. Princeton practised both running and kicking, although the attempts to kick goals from the field were unsuccessful.

The second game with Rutgers was excellent practice as the Rutgers men tackled fiercely and made Princeton work for the large score.

About thirty supporters accompanied the team to Cambridge to see them defeated by Harvard on November 18.

Princeton - Goals, 1; Touchdowns, 0; Safeties, 2.

Harvard—Goals, 1; Touchdowns, 1; Safeties, 0.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Haxall; goal by Haxall. 2—Touchdown by Mason; no goal.

2d Half. Goal from field by Mason.

Instead of kicking off Harvard dribbled the ball (i. e. kicked it along the ground just in front of the running kicker) and immediately passed it to a half back who stood ten yards back and punted to Keith; meanwhile the rush line pressed far forward and were ready to fall on the ball should it be muffed. Keith passed the ball to Wesselhoeft who ran through half the Princeton team and made a touchdown, but the referee decided that Wesselhoeft had been off side when he caught the ball and the touchdown was not allowed. A punt by Moffat was muffed by Coolidge, and Haxall fell on it back of the line. The ball was punted out. A fair catch and a place-kick by Haxall resulted in a goal, and most of the audience thought the score was one goal, one touchdown to nothing.

Princeton's players showed their skill in catching the ball, and almost every time it was sent into their field secured a free kick, although twice balls were muffed by their half backs and backs at great risk, for the Harvard rushers tackled hard, and checked excellently. Soon Princeton was hard pressed, but a long run by Peace brought the ball to the middle of the field. Moffat kicked the ball from the end of the twenty-five yard line. It descended a short distance in front of the line, and very nearly in the centre of the field. Mason caught it while on the full run and without stopping made for the corner of the field, passing Toler near the goal line and followed by Morgan, who by a beautiful spurt, landed himself on the Harvard quarter back as he crossed the line, and compelled the touchdown to be made in the corner of the field, so that Keith failed to kick goal.

In the second half, Toler went to the rush line, Peace coming to half back and Moffat going to his accustomed place at full back. Princeton now assumed defensive tactics but was gradually forced back to make a touchdown for safety which was at once followed by others. On a fumble Harvard secured the ball and Mason kicked a goal from the field. For the remainder of the half Harvard played a block game, voluntarily losing the ten-yard limit in order to retain possession of the ball when time was called. The referee decided that the score was one goal, one touchdown to one goal, in Harvard's favor. Princeton entered a protest, claiming that the logical interpretation of the rules was backed by precedent in declaring that a touchdown followed by a punt out and a goal

Counts as good as a goal and a touchdown; and that hence, the score was a tie, and two more innings of fifteen minutes each ought to be played.

1st Half. 1—Goal from field by Haxall. 2—Goal from field by Haxall.
2d Half. 3—Touchdown by Moffat; no goal. 4—Touchdown by Poe; goal.

The championship game with Columbia proved very exciting, for with very reliable backs Columbia placed eight men in the rush line and the new formation proved very effective. In less than two minutes after the kick-off a fair catch was made and Haxall kicked a goal from the field. Columbia then forced their way to Princeton's goal but in a few minutes Haxall secured the ball and made a difficult run of almost the entire field, being tackled by Morgan. Columbia rallied and took the ball back to the middle of the field, but before the half closed Haxall kicked another goal from the field. In the second half a rushing game was played, Moffat and Poe scoring two touchdowns and Columbia was forced to make seven touchdowns for safety.

Thanksgiving Day brought the close of the football season and the first defeat by Yale since 1876. The new five-yard rule worked well in this game, and no attempt was made by either side to play any sort of block game. Yale seemed superior in the rush line. In kicking she was outplayed by Princeton, and the catching and running of Princeton half-backs was also better, but Yale's forwards manifested their superiority from the first.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY YALE.

Princeton won the toss and took advantage of the strong breeze. The ball was kicked off by Peace. For the first twenty minutes of the contest, though Princeton was obliged to assume the defensive, Yale had very hard work to keep the ball in Princeton territory because of Princeton's splendid tackling and fine kick-outs. At length Yale forced the fighting close to Princeton's goal line, and Richards kicked a goal which was not allowed because Yale had held and played off-side. Two rushes by Twombly placed the ball again in front of Princeton's goal and Beck scored the first touchdown from which Richards kicked the goal, after thirty-two minutes of play.

The kick-off resulted in giving Princeton a free kick and Haxall sent the ball to Yale's thirty-yard line. Richards returned it by a fine running kick, but a minute later Moffat gained another free kick and the ball went flying back to Yale's territory. Then Bacon punted it back to centre field and for three or four minutes a succession of long kicks kept the ball flying back and forth. Baker made a free catch and then standing sixty-five yards from the Yale goal and a few yards west of the centre, Haxall kicked the ball squarely over the posts for Princeton's only score.

The second half showed Yale on the defensive, striving only to maintain the advantage gained in the first half. Instead of kicking off the ball was put in play, and then punted by Bird. Richards returned it, Moffat got a free catch and Richards muffed the kick, but he soon retrieved himself by kicking it almost to the Princeton goal. But Moffat at once transferred the playing to the centre of the field. Poe gained a long run, but Hull immediately recovered the ground, and a long kick by Farwell compelled Princeton to make a safety. For five or six minutes the ball scarcely touched the ground and the players were kept rushing from one end of the field to the other. Then the ball went out of bounds and Yale forced Princeton to make three touch-in-goals. The crowd rushed on the field and when Thompkins rolled over the line for a touchdown, Princeton claimed a foul. But the referee decided for Yale, though an attempt was made to clear the field. Like other Princeton teams, the men did not lose heart but played with such vigor that before Yale realized it, Princeton had rolled and carried and kicked the ball up almost to the Yale line. Then Yale held, but in vain. The ball was pushed over and it seemed as if Princeton had won a touchdown. The referee, however, decided that a Yale man was holding the ball for a down and called it a touch-in-goal for Yale. At once Princeton forced Yale to make a safety. After the ball had been carried to centre-field, Poe made two runs carrying the ball to Yale's five-yard line, but Farwell kicked it back to centre-field. Once more the fight was forced by Princeton, and again Yale's friends thought their team was in danger, but as before Yale saved themselves at the last moment. The time was getting short. Princeton knew it and worked harder than ever in a desperate attempt to cut down Yale's big lead. The men rolled over and over each other in a tangled pile until Terry made a big kick towards Princeton's goal. Then Fleming made an excellent run for Princeton and Poe helped with another run. An instant later Richards grabbed the ball, but just as he was tackled time was called. Yale had defeated Princeton for the first time since 1870, in a game full of fine kicking.

The system of scoring by points was introduced this year. A goal from a touchdown counted six points, a goal from the field five, a touchdown without a goal two, and a safety by opponents one. The reporters, however, did not understand the system thoroughly. Consequently the number of points does not always agree with the summary of the game. For the first time the Princeton team was put in charge of a professional trainer, James Robinson, who stayed until 1891. Then he went to Harvard for eight years and returned again to Princeton in the fall of 1899.

Rutgers had a stronger team than usual and in the first game of the season kept Princeton from scoring in the first half although she was compelled to make three safeties. Moffat made several tries for goal and finally succeeded in the second half in dropping a beautiful goal, from the forty-yard line.

Princeton was to have played Columbia on Saturday, November 10, in New York, and on that day and at the appointed hour, Princeton was on the ground and ready to play. The ground was muddy, and the rain still pouring, with no likelihood of stopping very soon. At Columbia's earnest solicitation, Princeton was quite willing to postpone the game till a better day. The referee approved, and Monday, November 12, was the day appointed and Princeton the place. Monday came, but no team from Columbia. They telegraphed a forfeit and the game was Princeton's in consequence. Later a delegate came from Columbia, asking for a reprieve and urging Princeton not to force Columbia from the Association on account of a forfeit not authorized or intended by their college but necessitated by the unforeseen and unavoidable negligence of some of their players. The Princeton directors consented but Columbia failed to play on the later day appointed.

The Harvard game was played in Princeton, with a strong wind sweeping the length of the field. This was against Princeton in the first half, and prevented kicking; but in the second half Princeton stopped running and Moffat kicked.

1st Half. Touchdown by Finney; goal by Moffat. 2—Goal by Cowling.
3—Touchdown by Harvard; no goal.
2d Half. 4—Goal by Moffat. 5—Goal by Moffat. 6—Goal by Moffat.
7—Goal by Moffat.

Moffat opened the game by dribbling the ball and passing it to Kimball for a kick. Austin's return punt was caught by Lamar, who after a short run, made a good pass to Baker. The latter made a beautiful run through the Harvard rushers, but was stopped by the half backs. Then followed punts and free catches by both sides. Aided by the wind, Harvard's punts brought the ball near the Princeton goal, while Moffat's kicking could make little headway against the wind. This, however, was partially offset by Lamar's running, which, with the help of Baker and DeCamp, brought the ball into Harvard territory. Then Wanamaker closely followed a kick by Moffat, secured the ball, and made a touchdown, which was not allowed, because he was off-side. Austin's punt was blocked, and Finney made a touchdown, from which Moffat kicked a goal. Harvard's kick-off was captured by Kimball, who, after a good run, was downed by Cabot. Baker ran through the rushers and half backs, but was downed by Cowling. Shortly afterwards, when Harvard secured the ball, Cowling dropped a beautiful goal from the middle of the field. Toward the close of the first half Harvard secured her only touchdown, more through an unfortunate slip of Princeton's than from any brilliant play of theirs. Cowling's high punt brought the ball very near Princeton's goal line. Instead of allowing the ball to roll over the line and make a touch-on-goal, Baker seized it, and endeavored to run. But the Harvard rushers were thick upon him, and in the confusion Baker lost the ball. It was secured by Harvard, and a touchdown was allowed, notwithstanding Baker had called "down" before losing the ball. Try-for-goal failed, and the first half closed with Harvard one point ahead.

The second half had hardly begun, when Moffat dropped a goal from the forty-six yard line. Then Lamar made the prettiest run of the day, successfully passing all the Harvard rushers, and, with only one man in front of him, was in a fair way to make a touchdown, when a man, who had failed to stop him fairly, tripped him from behind with his hands. Bonsal broke through the Princeton line, but Kimball tackled him in fine style from behind, and the ball was kept in Harvard territory until Moffat scored another goal for Princeton, which seemed to demoralize Harvard. Another moment and Moffat had kicked another goal. Then Baker gave an exhibition of fine running and kicking, which kept the ball near the Harvard goal until Moffat had a chance to kick another goal, the fifth and last, which he did by a very difficult kick from the extreme side of the field. Harvard had lost all heart, and for the rest of the half, being afraid to lose the ball, they confined themselves to rushing. By a trick of double passes, very cleverly concealed, they deceived the Princeton rushers, only to be downed by the sure tackling of the light half backs. This is known as "Moffat's game," for Harvard was dumbfounded at his remarkable kicking; and well they might be, for four goals in one half of a championship game is a wonderful record.

Yale defeated Princeton on November 24 in a very rough game. "The manner in which the game was played, from the opening scrimmage to the last, afforded ample evidence of the alleged brutality of the present method of playing college football. It was not football, even in the college interpretation of the sport but simply a series of slugging, wrestling bouts between the fighting rushers of the two teams which was only kept from ending with a vulgar row by the efforts of a minority of the teams and a referee."

1—Touchdown by Peters; goal.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY YALE.

The ground was moist and slippery owing to the recent rain and this made it impossible for Princeton to exhibit her unusual proficiency in running and kicking. Yale's great advantage in weight was further increased by the condition of the grounds.

Terry kicked off about twenty yards and then Yale began the systematic blocking operation which she maintained throughout the game. Powerful rushing which the Princeton forwards were unable to prevent, resulted in slow but sure games for Yale. At Princeton's ten-yard line, Richards tried for goal and failed. Then a long punt by Moffat brought momentary relief. The ball, however, was quickly returned and Peters scored a touchdown after eight minutes of play. This was the only score of the game.

Moffat led off with a long kick and Lamar made twenty yards which brought Princeton well into Yale's territory. After some lively punting on both sides, Moffat tried for goal twice but failed. The Princeton rushers, while really doing remarkably well, considering the crushing weight they were pitted against, did not succeed in holding their men in check long enough to permit Moffat to kick with precision. As the game went on, he was more than once seized before he had disposed of the ball, and he was always hurried. The Princeton players saw that they had to contend with sheer strength and began to work more steadily.

The play of the second half was about equal, with excellent kicking on both sides. Finally Lamar made a beautiful run in spite of the desperate effort of several Yale rushers to overhaul him, and finished with a vigorous punt. The ball was caught by Terry and returned. Baker tried for a fair catch but muffed and was downed by Hull and Peters.

The gains and losses were about even for some time, though the ball was in Princeton's territory. Three times Peters had to be warned against foul blocking, but the referee refused to disqualify him saying that he had not understood the rules to make this provision but that he should adopt this interpretation for the rest of the game. When play was resumed the ball was snapped to Twombly and then passed twenty-five feet to Richards and considerably in front of him, so that he had to dash up to catch it. Richards made a good run being downed finally by Finney. Altogether this was the boldest and most scientific play that Yale made.

Thus the season closed with defeat, but we must remember it was the struggle of a green team against veterans.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Lamar; no goal.
2d Half. 2—Touchdown by Harris; goal by R. Hodge. 3—Touchdown by Bird; goal. 4—Goal by Rutgers.

Football practice begun one week after college opened but though the Varsity was strong, the scrub was weak.

In the first game of the season the ball was kept near Rutgers' goal for about twenty minutes before the first touchdown was made by Lamar, from a pass by Baker. Baker tried for goal but the referee failed to allow it, much to the surprise of the Princeton men. Before the half closed Rutgers was forced to make two safeties. In the second half Toler took Lamar's place. Soon Harris made a touchdown. Shortly afterward Bird pushed over the line with the ball, making another touchdown from which another goal was kicked. A Rutgers half back made a try for goal from the field which went more than a yard to the left of the left goal post, but as the referee did not see the ball but only the demonstrations of the Rutgers team, it was counted as a goal. The Princeton rush line played an almost faultless game.

In the Wesleyan game the first touchdown was made by Hodge. A goal was soon made from a touchdown by DeCamp, who very cleverly took the ball from a Wesleyan rusher behind their goal line. Wesleyan made two safeties in this half. Time for the first half was called at the end of a fine run by Lamar for nearly the whole length of the field. Wesleyan very wisely played a time-killing game, in which they received valuable assistance from their umpire. In the next half Wesleyan soon made a safety, which was followed by Princeton's safety, due to carelessness. A touchdown was made by Harris, and time was called after another safety by Wesleyan.

1—Touchdown by Harris; no goal.

On Oct. 15 Princeton played the third and poorest game of the season. Baker opened the game with a fine run, but was hurt, and Bickham took his place. Stevens tried running with their half backs with considerable success, and also kicked well. On Maurry's return of a long punt by Toler, Irvine stopped the kick in front of Stevens' goal line, and Harris fell on the ball for a touchdown. Nothing was added to the score during the remainder of the game, and the contest was unexciting and discouraging. The Princeton team played without snap and fumbled badly. Heavier than the Stevens' line, the Princeton rushers blocked loosely, lacked energy in breaking through, and seldom fell on the ball. The ball was for the most part in the middle of the field, but several times it was forced very close to the Princeton goal. Once Stevens carried the ball across the Princeton line, though the touchdown was not allowed. When time was called the ball was in Stevens' possession on Princeton's ten-yard line. In fact, the game was an humiliating one. All expedients seemed wanting to steady the play, and throughout the game there was a lack of concerted action and team play. "It is difficult to account for the poor playing of the team in this game, but it may be laid in part to their hearty dinner, taken just before coming on the field."

On October 25, Princeton played the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia. As a game itself, it was not remarkable, for Pennsylvania was outclassed. The play of the first half was weak but Princeton as usual waked up in the second half. Pennsylvania dribbled off and were at once forced back to their line; but a pretty run of Thayer prevented them from making a safety. The ball continued within Pennsylvania's twenty-four yard line until Baker secured the first touchdown. Harris soon followed with a second and before the close of the half, Pennsylvania touched down for safety. The second half opened with a dribble to Lamar, who accomplished the feat of reaching the five-yard line. Touchdowns were made near the edge of the field by Bird, Harris and Hodge, but only one goal was scored from the punts-out. Just before time was called, Baker dropped a goal from the field.

Yet this game ought to be famous, for in it was invented and tried the first Princeton "V" or flying wedge. R. M. Hodge, '86, writes: "In the middle of the game, Capt. Bird had called upon Baker, '85, half-back, to run behind the rush line which charged seven abreast down the field. It was an old play and gained little ground the second time we tried it. It struck me instantly that if the rush line would jump into the shape of a V with the apex forward and Baker inside, we would certainly make a great distance. Bird tried, and Baker got to the five-yard line from centre field. We then reserved this for the Yale game, and Lamar ran behind it for a good gain on the opening play. Yale did not copy it next year, and Princeton dropped it for a play that failed totally. Princeton revived it in 1886, and Yale in her Princeton games first used it in 1889." This formation was used only on the "kick-off" and after a fair catch and must not be confused with the two scrimmage plays, also called "V"-tricks, which were invented by the Hodges in 1888. It was in connection with this that "interference" arose. Before this there had been no attempt at sending men ahead of the runner for the sake of interference, but the idea was to follow him closely, with the purpose of having the ball passed back or taking it from the hands of the runner when tackled. There was no conception of team interference; in fact in 1884, "interference" meant simply for two men to contrive to be next to each other and to separate far enough for their own player who had the ball, to run between them without the danger of being tackled at that particular point.

2d Half. Touchdowns by H. Hodge (4), Baker (2), Irvine (2), Harris (2), Lamar (1), DeCamp (1), Wanamaker (1); 10 goals.

On October 29 Princeton played Lafayette at Princeton and defeated her by the largest score ever made in a football match. There was no attempt to kick but Princeton played a rushing game and seemed curious to pile up as large a score as possible.

The second Stevens game was characterized by rough playing of both sides, and was the roughest game of football that has been seen in Princeton for years. Stevens had the kick off. Princeton held the ball near Stevens' goal for the first ten minutes, when touchdowns were made by Lamar and Bird. In the second half Princeton played very loosely in the rush line. Stevens held the ball inside of Princeton's twenty-five yard line long enough to make Princeton men fear that a touchdown would be made, and in fact they would have been compelled to touchdown for safety, had it not been for a quick punt by Toler. Toward the latter half Princeton played with more spirit.

In the Johns Hopkins game the ball was put into play by Princeton, who dribbled it, and by loose playing and fumbling lost it immediately. Then by strong rushing Princeton compelled their opponents to make a safety. The ball was for some time in Princeton's territory when by good passing Lamar got it and made a beautiful run of half the length of the field. The ball was passed to Harris who scored. The first half was marked by the good tackling of Hopkins and the unsystematic playing of Princeton with a tendency to fumble.

The first championship game of the season was played with Harvard on November 15, and resulted in a victory for Princeton by a score of 34—67; the largest ever made against Harvard. Harvard relied upon her half backs' kicking and the play of the rush line which tackled fiercely and broke through the Princeton's forwards with apparent ease.

Princeton played a running game without much success until Baker caught a punt in the middle of the field and ran through the whole Harvard team for a touchdown. After the kick-off good punts by Willard and Kimball sent the ball inside Princeton's ten-yard line. Hurd then got hold of it and running through and around Princeton's players placed it behind the Princeton goal. But the touchdown was not allowed because Hurd had run outside of bounds. Kimball then tried to kick a goal from the field but was unsuccessful.

Good rushing and kicking by Princeton forced the ball back to the centre of the field and soon it was inside of Harvard's five-yard line. Peabody punted it back to the centre of the field again but Lamar made another good rush and carried it to the Harvard five-yard line. Irvine carried the ball over the line and made Princeton's second touchdown. For a short time the play was in Princeton's territory. Willard punted the ball back of the Princeton line and when Baker muffed it, Thayer fell on it for Harvard's only touchdown.

After much kicking in the second half, Hodge and Lamar made good runs that yielded a touchdown. Runs by Moffat and Harris secured another touchdown. Then Harvard carried the ball down to the Princeton goal but failed to make a touchdown through a bad fumble of Kimball. In a rough scrimmage Baker turned his ankle and H. P. Toler, '86, took his place. Princeton now braced and nearly all the men made good runs passing the ball from one to another with great skill. Wanamaker received the ball on Harvard's fifteen-yard line and scored a touchdown. Weak kicking and much fumbling allowed Princeton to get the ball on Harvard's five-yard line, where Hodge attempted to kick a goal but failed. DeCamp, however, secured the ball and scored a touchdown. Later Harvard was forced to make a touch-in-goal; Willard kicked the ball out very poorly and when the half was closing Lamar secured it, and ran rapidly and easily through the Harvard team, some tackling, some missing him, but as he was about to cross the line, Bemis punched it out of his arm and dropped on it.

The Thanksgiving game with Yale was very disappointing and was declared "no game" by the referee because darkness prevented the teams from playing two full halves. A great deal of time had been consumed in debating the partial decisions of the referee.

A goal by Moffat not allowed by referee. Game called on account of darkness.

1—Touchdown by Yale; goal. 2—Touchdown by DeCamp; no goal.

NO CHAMPIONSHIP AWARDED.

The following account of this game will illustrate the newspaper reports of the time which led to much public opposition against the game.

"A moment after the game began Captain Richards of Yale, got the ball in his hands and swooped with it, dodging or upsetting all the men who opposed him, to within a couple of yards of Princeton's goal. There he was brought to earth, and the ball was given to Bayne for a kick. Bayne seemed about to kick and then like a fox, darted on with the ball over Princeton's line, and came safely back with it. The goal was kicked by Terry in three minutes.

"The ball was taken back to the centre of the field and the fight went on. For some minutes people did not seem to realize how hot it was getting. The bulk of the spectators could see the elevens periodically hurl themselves together and build themselves in kicking and writhing heaps in divers parts of the field. They had a general vision of threatening attitudes, fists shaken in front of noses, dartings hither and thither as when hounds are after a fox, throttling, wrestling and the pitching of individuals headlong to the earth; and all this was an exceedingly animated spectacle, which drew from them volley after volley of applause. Those inside the lines, the judges, the reporters and the attendants upon the teams, were nearer and saw something more. They saw real fighting, savage blows that drew blood, and falls that seemed as though they must crack all the bones and drive the life out of those who sustained them; and eyes were waxing every moment hotter. DeCamp secured a touchdown in goal and scored four for his side; and then both elevens relinquished the last of such restraint as may up to this time have remained with them and let themselves out utterly.

"Then came a crush on one of the edges of the field, about midway between the goals. All the maddened giants of both the teams were in it, and they lay heaped, kicking, choking, hitting, gouging and howling. One smaller man lay under them. He held the ball hugged to his breast, and pressed it to the ground. His chin rested upon it, and his white face looked out from the ruck as the face of a man might look who was on the rack. Gradually the pack separated, and the smaller man lay alone. He lay for a moment still, except that his face was working in a frightful manner. Then he rolled over upon his back, and one of his legs was drawn up until it almost touched his chin. He tried to clutch the ground, and threw his head far back, pressing into the earth, and rolling it from side to side. Some of his companions caught hold of him by the shoulders, and raised him to a sitting posture. His lips were drawn wide apart, showing his teeth tightly clenched. His face was as white as chalk. His hands wandered up and down his body, beating it and tearing at his shirt. Suddenly he threw out his arms, tore himself away from those who were supporting him, and rolled over upon his stomach, rubbing his face into the muddy turf as though seeking for a soft spot in a pillow. In an instant he was on his back again, clutching his breast, and gasping as though each breath was to be his last. It was a silent and frightened pack that walked nervously back and forth near him. They seemed hardly to dare to look at him. They would stand for a moment, and then turn their backs. Hardly a loud word was spoken among those who surrounded him while he lay there. The multitude outside the lines wondered what was going on, and uttered wild yells and adjurations to those who blocked their vision to clear out. Their protests finally took the form of a chorus, like those which were chanted in the late campaign: 'Clear the field! Clear the field!' It might have been heard in Harlem.

"At length four of his companions lifted the injured man, and bore him outside of the surrounding small circle. The multitude saw then what was the matter, and the chorus stopped with frightful suddenness. A strange murmur was borne over from the grand-stand, where the women were. Thick woolen shirts and blankets were thrown down in the open field, and the injured man was laid upon them. Others of the players came sauntering up. They looked like men fresh from real battle. Big Peters, of Yale, and Adams, of Princeton, looked like butchers. Their dirty canvas jackets and knickerbockers were streaked and flecked with blood. All the men were tattered and muddy, and nearly all had bleeding wounds or bruises showing amid the dirt that was crusted on their heads and faces.

"The injured man—the one most badly injured, that is—was Captain Richards, of Yale. He had previously injured his leg at the thigh joint, and had been forbidden to play. Now his leg had been doubled under him in the crush, and had suffered injuries that nobody could tell. It did not grow better, and Richards was finally carried off to the house, which stands in a corner of the grounds, and put to bed. He was still there when the game was concluded, and the surgeon who was called to attend him said that he had suffered serious injury.

"Another man took the place of Richards, and the game went on. DeCamp, of Princeton, got the ball, and got through the Yale barrier with a Yale man on his back and hanging to him like the Old Man of the Sea. The blue legs climbed higher and higher, until they finally shot forth in a spasm, and DeCamp, unable to maintain his balance, went down. It was a frightful fall. DeCamp's head seemed to have been driven into the earth. As the Yale men arose from him he rolled over upon his back and lay motionless. Two of his fellows ran to him, knelt at his side, and slapped him upon the breast, directly over the heart. At the end of a minute he stirred, moved, rolled over, sat up, and looked around like a man desirous of becoming acquainted with strange surroundings, and stood up. The multitude roared as he walked off to his place and the game went on.

"Five minutes later a pair of striped legs pitched headlong, and failed to get up. It was DeCamp again. His left arm hung limp in front of him as he sat. From appearances it had been dislocated at the shoulder joint.

"Two minutes after this Toler slugged Marlin, a Yale substitute, in the face, grounding him as though he had been shot. The umpire was called upon to take notice of this. It is pretty sure that Marlin had previously hit Toler 'in touch,' but Toler was still not justified in slugging Marlin, and so the umpire barred out Wanamaker, a perfectly innocent man. The reason why he was barred out for slugging that Toler had done was that the umpire believed him to have done it. Wanamaker's jacket was bloody, and that was against him, or would have been, except that everybody else's jacket was in the same condition.

"The game went on for several minutes more, and then stopped, while all the players and judges grouped about the referee. Finally a Princeton man, covered with mud and blood stains, issued from this group, and passed along in front of the line of Yale coaches, addressing those on top of them vehemently and shaking his fist at them. It was a dispute over a ruling of the umpire. Princeton refused to play further unless the umpire was changed. The dispute lasted forty minutes. An ex-football player of Yale talked of the game in the interval. He declared that every man on the field was covered, under his clothing, with plasters and appliances for sprain and rupture. Princeton at last gave in, and the game went on until the moon began to silver behind the mist."

Earlier in the game Moffat had kicked a goal from the field which had not been allowed by the referee; the referee also objected to Princeton's method of passing the ball to the quarter back. Yale refused to accept his resignation and Princeton agreed to finish the game under protest. Before further scores were made darkness put an end to play.

That night the referee declared the battle a draw because the rules said that there must be two full innings of forty-five minutes each. The Princeton delegates came in with a challenge to play Yale another game to decide the question. But the Harvard men said that the rules did not allow any such challenging after Thanksgiving. Yale claimed the championship, but the Convention refused to make any award.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Harris; goal. 2—Touchdown by Harris; no goal. 3—Touchdown by Savage. 4—Touchdown by Bickham; goal. 5—Touchdown by Cowan. 6—Touchdown by DeCamp; goal. 7—Touchdown by DeCamp; goal. 8—Touchdown by Harris; goal by R. Hodge. 9—Touchdown by DeCamp. 10—Touchdown by Lamar; goal.

2d Half. 11—Touchdown by Lamar; goal. 12—Touchdown by Harris. 13—Touchdown by Williamson; goal. 14—Touchdown by Griffith; goal. 15—Touchdown by DeCamp. 16—Touchdown by Lamar; goal. 17—Touchdown by H. Hodge. 18—Touchdown by H. Hodge; goal.

In the opening game with Stevens, Lamar made a beautiful run, dodging all the Stevens team. But as a whole the team played poorly, tackling high and loosely; and the size of the score is due to Stevens' weakness. Several touchdowns were made because Stevens fumbled Lamar's punts and the ball rolled behind their line where a Princeton man fell on it.

In the second game with Stevens, the running and rushing tactics were continued; only one try for goal was made. The game was uninteresting, for it was too warm for spirited playing, and the ball was never in Princeton's territory.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Frazier. 2—Touchdown by Harris; goal. 3—Touchdown by Lamar; goal. 4—Touchdown by DeCamp. 5—Touchdown by Harris; goal. 6—Touchdown by Lamar; goal. 7—Touchdown by Griffith. 8—Touchdown by Harris. 9—Touchdown by DeCamp; goal. 10—Touchdown by Houston; goal. 11—Touchdown by DeCamp; goal.

The first game with Pennsylvania exhibited some of the best and of the worst playing of the year. At the start Princeton carried the ball down to Pennsylvania's three-yard line where Williamson fumbled and Rutter seizing it carried the ball to Princeton's twenty-yard line before he was downed. The ball was then kicked and returned; Harris carried it up to the centre of the field, but the lack of harmony between the quarter back and the backs lost the ground that had been gained. Hodge passed the ball to Williamson, instead of to Savage, and as they were very close together, each expected the other to get the ball. Instead it passed over Williamson's head and on by Savage; Frazier broke through and fell on the ball for Pennsylvania's first touchdown. Princeton tried to rush the ball down the field, but with little success, for the backs fumble badly and the line blocked weakly. Finally Lamar punted the ball, then Pepper fumbled it and Harris scored. Two long runs by Lamar secured the next touchdown. Then DeCamp scored when Hutchinson fumbled Savage's kick. Pennsylvania scored their other points in the same way, for Savage muffed Rutler's kick, enabling him to kick again. On the second kick the ball touched Irvine and Houston scored. The second half was filled with long runs and as usual Princeton played better than in the first half.

The team possessed strong material but was weak in defensive work. The backs seemed especially weak in the game of October 31. The rushing was varied in this game and there was a great deal of kicking on both sides. Graham kicked two goals and Lamar tried two, but the Princeton line could not hold the Pennsylvania rushers long enough to let him kick safely.

November 7 witnessed a great improvement in team play. There was little kicking, for the guarding was poor. All other games had opened with a dribbling ball. But running yielded a score of 108, the largest of the year and the third largest on record. Lamar made a phenomenal run and dodged the entire length of the field but his one attempt at goal was blocked.

The first championship game was with Wesleyan which was easily defeated by the largest score of any championship game. But despite the large score Wesleyan played the strongest and most manly game of any team that Princeton had yet met. Princeton team played well, if we overlook their fumbling. Lamar scored seven touchdowns; one of them was made after he had run the entire length of the field through the whole Wesleyan team.

The students felt that the Yale game ought not to be played on the home grounds of either college but in New York, where the audience would be more evenly divided in their sympathies. There was a special reason for going to New York this year; Princeton wanted an opportunity to atone for the disgraceful exhibition of the former year. The Trustees threatened to prevent the game, but after consideration of the exceptional circumstances, they decided that it might be played in New York but not on Thanksgiving Day.

Then Yale insisted that if the game was played in New York it must be on Thanksgiving Day when the Yale students could attend in a body; if Princeton still desired to play on the Saturday before Thanksgiving the game must be played in New Haven. Rather than give up the contest, Princeton yielded to Yale because Yale held the championship. On November 21 the team and the whole College went to New Haven, for the Faculty had shown their trust in the students in omitting all exercises on Saturday.

Princeton, 6. Yale, 5.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1—Goal from field by Watkinson.
2d Half (45 mins.) 2—Touchdown by Lamar; goal by R. Hodge.

The decisive game was won, notwithstanding Yale's ungenerous action. In the early part of the game Peters began that systematic interference with the ball which effectually checkmated Princeton during the entire first half. Whenever Adams tried to snap the ball back, Peters would grasp both ends with his hands, making it next to impossible to put the ball in play to the quarter back. According to the rules he undoubtedly had a right to one-half of the ball, but every one who played football knew that it was impossible for a man with his hands entirely on side to draw the ball toward himself as Peters generally did, and the decision of Mr. Camp that allowed this off-side play enabled Peters to block effectually the Princeton game until Princeton took measures to secure fair play. Once only did Mr. Camp give Princeton the five-yard forfeit for this off-side play, and if this decision was correct his former rulings on this point were inconsistent.

Princeton played a losing game during the entire first half. All her well practised tricks were rendered ineffective and the spirit seemed gone from the play. Watkinson made three tries for goal but without success. Again and again in the first half, Lamar was forced to punt out from near the Princeton goal, for Yale kept up a series of terrific rushes. On the fourth attempt Watkinson dropped a goal. In this half Princeton men succeeded in holding Yale on a sloping field near their twenty-five yard line for three-quarters of an hour with scarcely any danger so far as touchdowns were concerned.

As in all the games this season the second half was played better than the first. Princeton went in determined to win despite the handicap of Peters' interference. Princeton rushed the ball down into Yale's territory but Yale secured it on downs. Here she did her best playing, forcing the ball up-hill back nearly to the centre of the field by the steady organized work of the rush line, and the runs of Watkinson, Peters and Beecher. Here the ball remained for some time although gradually working back into Yale's territory until a muff of Toler gave Yale the ball on Princeton's forty-yard line. But ten minutes more of the game remained, and many of the disheartened Princeton sympathizers had withdrawn from the edge of the crowd, which had now gathered around the "in touch" lines to witness the desperate attempts of the visiting team to stave off an added touchdown which now seemed imminent for the ball was in the hands of Yale and was steadily advanced towards the Princeton goal line. At this point Captain Peters hesitated, the time was growing short and would perhaps not admit scoring by successive rushes. He decided upon a kick. The ball was sent to Watkinson, the Yale full back, who drove it by a long swinging punt across the twenty-yard line towards the Princeton goal. It was a perfect kick and one most difficult to catch. A Princeton man attempted to make the catch, but the ball shot off his breast towards one of the "in touch" bounding lines. Lamar, with the agility of a cat, bounded after it, and catching it on a rebound, sped away with it without stopping, along the in-touch line. By this time the Yale forwards had gone past the ball in attempting to fall on what was considered a muffed ball. Lamar darted between Corwin and Wallace before they awoke to the situation, and cleared the Yale rush line which was most skilfully divided by the Princeton men. The backs were there to encounter Lamar. Lamar feinted to get by along the southern boundary line. Bull and his comrade were bunched in his way. As Lamar came flying down upon them, he swerved to the right with incredible swiftness, threw Beecher over his head, and before either could recover was bounding on, desperately pursued by Peters and Watkinson. Peters, strong and untiring, was just a few yards behind him when the forty-yard line was reached. The success of his team depended on his ability to narrow this to tackling distance. The white five-yard lines flew under the feet of the sharply breathing runners. The last ten-yard line was passed and the arms of Peters were outstretched for a tackle, but Lamar had plunged over the goal line and lay panting on the ground with the ball under him. A goal was kicked by Hodge. For the remaining four minutes Princeton played a time-killing game, though they steadily forced Yale back and never lost possession of the ball.

Yale's play was almost entirely negative, wasting time, interfering with the ball, every rusher seizing and holding a man, all with the one purpose of meeting Princeton's splendid system of offensive play. They played a dogged, sullen, grovelling game, not for the sake of sport, but solely to win. The discipline was perfect. There was little offensive play done save by Watkinson in kicking, Beecher in running, and Peters in rushing. As for quarter back play proper, dodging, passing or rush line tricks, there was none to speak of.

Princeton, however, excelled in running, dodging, passing, in quick, sure playing at critical moments, in their rush line tricks and in their general team play. Yale persisted in making long punts, which resulted only in a kick over the line, or, as in one instance, in allowing a touchdown to be made, while Princeton always made high steep punts, which gained less ground, but enabled their men to be put on side, and thus often gained them the ball, and at least did not lay them open to a run in by the other side or a catch in front of their goal.

The final game in the championship was won by Princeton from University of Pennsylvania by 57 to 0. Princeton's play was rather loose compared to that of the Yale game. The slippery condition of grounds prevented Princeton's usual game of running and dodging.

The ball was dribbled to Cowan, and advanced by Lamar and DeCamp. After six minutes of play Cowan scored the first touchdown. Hutchinson advanced the ball well up the field, where it remained some time, on account of Princeton's loose and inactive play. Then Princeton ran it back until DeCamp scored. After a series of punts H. Hodge secured a free catch from Graham's kick. Savage kicked a beautiful goal from the forty-seven yard line. Pennsylvania then rushed the ball up into Princeton territory, where Princeton secured it, and at once forced it back until Lamar crossed the line for the third touchdown. Princeton got the ball immediately upon Rutter's fumble, and Harris made the next touchdown. Before time was called, DeCamp had added another touchdown to Princeton's score. The second half opened with vigorous playing, and although H. Hodge soon touched the ball down behind Pennsylvania's goal, the referee did not allow the score. Short runs, however, sent Harris across the line for the sixth touchdown. Hutchinson muffed Lamar's long kick; Harris secured the ball, and by an excellent run scored again. Pennsylvania got the ball on the fourth down, but Cook blocked Graham's kick, and Harris made the eighth touchdown. Runs by Adams, Harris and DeCamp yielded another touchdown. Strong play by Pennsylvania advanced the ball far into Princeton's territory, but Irvine blocked Graham's try-for-goal, and Lamar scored. Runs by H. Hodge and Lamar gave another touchdown. The remainder of the game was spent in punting, but Princeton seemed so anxious to score that the players got in each other's way. DeCamp had crossed the Pennsylvania line before time was called, but the referee refused to allow the touchdown.

The outlook at Princeton in the fall of 1886 was not very bright. They lost in the graduating class three backs and four rushers. Rushers were comparatively easily replaced, but the dearth of promising half back material was discouraging. Few men came out, and as late as October 15 the captain was forced to make a printed appeal.

1st Half (30 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Price; 5 mins. 2—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Savage; 10 mins. 3—Touchdown by George; goal by Ames. 4—Touchdown by Cowan. 5—Touchdown by Princeton. 6—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Savage.

The first game was against Stevens, and owing to the warm weather short halves were played. Immediately after the kick-off Princeton began working the ball toward the Stevens goal. A fine run by Price carried the ball to the five-yard line, and then Price was pushed over for the first touchdown. Ames and Price both made fine runs, and placed the ball within three feet of Stevens' line. The ball was given to Cowan, who secured the second touchdown. After the kick-off Stevens kept possession of the ball, but were rapidly forced back to their own goal line. The ball was passed back for a safety touchdown, but George broke through, and fell on the ball. Ames soon made a brilliant run from midfield, which resulted in another touchdown. The playing of Princeton was very good, considering that only four of last year's team were playing.

forwards and the superior agility of their half backs told, and in ten minutes Ames scored a touchdown from which Savage kicked a goal. In less than five minutes after the ball was kicked off Savage kicked a goal from the field and later Stevens was forced to make a safety. A touchdown by Irvine resulted in no goal, for Savage's try fell short of the bar. The Princeton forwards then kept the ball close to the Stevens line until Cowan got it out of a scrimmage and scored. Savage again kicked a goal from the field after eight minutes play. When the ball was started again Campbell got it and made a good run close to the Princeton line, but the strong rush line of Princeton prevented its being rushed through. A free kick by Cuntz resulted in no goal, and after two good runs by Ames had been stopped, Savage kicked another goal from the twenty-five-yard line. Nine minutes more play and time was called with the ball in the centre of the field. With the wind against them Princeton played even better in the second half than in the first. Had it not been for Campbell's and Crisfield's good tackling Princeton would have made many more points.

2d Half. 4—Touchdown by Ames; 4 mins. 5—Safety by U. of P. 6—Touchdown by Ames; goal by Ames. 7—Touchdown by Cowan.

A practice game was played on October 16 with the University of Pennsylvania, but each side played with several substitutes. Cook opened the game with a long run, and good runs by Irvine and Price placed the ball within four feet of Pennsylvania's line. Cook then scored. After this Pennsylvania played harder and Princeton found it difficult to advance the ball at all. In one of the scrambles, Hamme secured the ball, and Graham kicked. Ames caught it and by good dodging, with poor tackling, secured another touchdown. Irvine caught the kick-off and ran it back fifteen yards before he was thrown by Cline. Tunis then stopped Cowan without a gain, but later, with the help of Cook and Spalding, Cowan scored.

The second half was begun by Graham's long kick, but the ball was quickly returned to Pennsylvania's goal line by the long runs of Irvine, Cowan and Ames. For fifteen minutes after this, neither side obtained any advantage as the rushers of both teams played hard and well together. Finally after much hard work Graham was forced to make a safety. Four minutes later Ames scored. The last touchdown was scored by Cowan after a forty-yard run.

The return game on October 23, started with good rushing and hard playing. After eight minutes of work, runs of Cowan, Cook and Ames placed the ball on Pennsylvania's five-yard line, from which Price carried it over for a touchdown. The second touchdown was scored by Cowan on a side pass. Shell kicked out from mid-field but on two runs, by Ames and Price, the ball was taken back, and George scored. Good rushes yielded three more touchdowns before the half ended. In the beginning of the second half, Princeton carried the ball down to the Pennsylvania line. But fine runs by Miel and Cotiart and long punts by Shell brought the ball near Princeton's goal, where Shell kicked a goal from the field. Later the ball was carried past Ames but secured by Cotiart and forced toward the Princeton goal. After a touch-in goal Princeton carried the ball to their twenty-yard line and gave it to Cowan, who carried it fifty yards. Three runs by Price, Ames and Irvine yielded another goal. Thomson kicked out from the twenty-five yard line and Ames, having caught the ball, made a good run into position and kicked a goal from the field. Thomson again kicked off, Price fumbled the ball and was thrown by Miel. Sloan attempted to pass the ball to Ames but threw it over his head and Miel fell on it. This was about thirty yards from Princeton's goal, and the ball was given to Downs who cleverly made a touchdown. There remained eight minutes before the half closed and in this Princeton scored three touchdowns.

2d Half. 6—Touchdown by Penn; goal by Graham.

The championship game with Pennsylvania was played in Philadelphia and won by Princeton. Play was started by Hodge dribbling the ball to Ames, who made a run of fifteen yards. Cowan and Cook made twenty-five yards more and Price scored. The try at goal failed, but H. Hodge secured the ball and made another touchdown. The ball was taken to mid-field and passed to Morris who gained eight yards. Graham then made a fine kick but Savage returned it well. A Pennsylvania man fumbled the ball and Ames, picking it up, made a brilliant run, until he was tackled by Morris. Through poor playing on the rush line H. Hodge secured the ball and scored. On starting play again, Morris made a good run and Downs followed his example, but unfortunately lost the ball. Wagenhurst picked it up and ran sixty yards through a clear field for a touchdown. For ten minutes the play remained in the centre of the field, then Cook broke through and grabbed the ball as it was being passed to Downs, and ran half the length of the field. The half ended by Ames carrying the ball over for Princeton's fifth touchdown.

The playing of the second half began by a dribble to Morris who made a good run. Graham then made a long kick, which was well returned by Williamson. Graham kicked again and Beck tackled Ames before he could run with the ball. Hodge then passed it to Price but he was well downed by Miel. Cowan was given the ball but he could not get past Tunis, and Princeton was forced to make a touch-in-goal. Price attempted to run but was downed by Dewey. Ames, however, made a beautiful run. Princeton again tried kicking, but Graham's long punts kept the ball on Princeton territory and Beck's, Miel's and Dewey's tackling finally brought the ball to Princeton's thirty-yard line. A clever kick and run by Beck, a quick play and good rushing by Alexander gave Pennsylvania a touchdown. The play for the remainder of the half was quick and fast. Two good runs by Price advanced the ball to Pennsylvania's ten-yard line, but the line held and Princeton lost the ball, which was at once kicked to mid-field where it it remained to the end of the half.

Princeton, 12. Harvard, 0

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Ames; goal by R. Hodge; 13 mins. 2—Touchdown by Ames; goal by R. Hodge.

On November 13 Princeton met Harvard for the first time in two years. Harvard presented a strong team, and their team-play excited general comment, while Princeton excelled in running and dodging. The wind and slippery condition of the ground accounted for the little fumbling that there was. The features of the game were Harvard's fine rushing at the start and that of Princeton during the second half, when the ball was twice steadily advanced from one end of the field to the other without losing it. Play was begun by Brooks dribbling the ball to Sears and he, when tackled, passed it to Porter who made a fine run until thrown out of bounds. Brooks then put the ball into play and by a very clever trick carried it within Princeton's twenty-yard line. By good blocking, Princeton secured the ball and Ames punted to mid-field where Porter fumbled and H. Hodge secured the ball. Ames then made a hard run directly through Harvard's centre and Cowan followed for a gain of fifteen yards. The ball was now on the five-yard line and on the next play Ames scored. The ball was dribbled to Sears who ran twenty yards. The ball went to Princeton on downs, but Harvard held them for three downs and Savage was forced to kick. Peabody returned it and when Ames fumbled, Holden secured the ball but was immediately tackled by Cowan. By a side pass the ball was given to Burgess who ran well till tackled by Price. Porter then make a good run but was downed by H. Hodge. Then Harvard lost the advantage for Woodman dropped the ball. Cowan carried the ball back forty yards to Harvard's goal, and runs by Hodge, Ames, Irvine and Price placed it on the ten-yard line. When Price was tackled he passed the ball to Moore who rushed the ball within a few feet of Harvard's line. Lining up quickly the rush-line made an opening for Ames, who made the second touchdown.

The second half opened with the "V" formation that enabled Ames to carry the ball to Harvard's twenty-yard line. Although Princeton often had the ball near Harvard's goal, they were so far outplayed that they were unable to score and their goal was constantly threatened. Harvard was weak in kicking and catching but excelled Princeton in other plays.

Princeton, 76. Wesleyan, 6.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Cowan; goal; 1¼ min. 2—Touchdown by Ames; goal; 9 mins. 3—Touchdown by Ames; goal; 13 mins. 4—Touchdown by Steelman; goal. 5—Touchdown by Price. 6—Touchdown by Price; goal. 7—Touchdown by Moore; 8—Touchdown by Price; goal.

2d Half. 9—Touchdown by Cowan; goal; 3¼ mins. 10—Touchdown by Ames; goal. 11—Touchdown by Price; goal by Savage. 12—Touchdown by Moore. 13—Touchdown by Price. 14—Touchdown by Ames; goal.

This game was a magnificent exhibition of skill on both sides although Princeton outweighed Wesleyan twenty pounds per man. Wesleyan won the toss and took advantage of the slight wind. Two minutes after Princeton had put the ball in play, good rushes by Ames and Cowan earned the first touchdown. During the next ten minutes Ames, by artful dodging and splendid kicking, made two more touchdowns. Then Wesleyan rallied. Smith made a low punt, but Princeton fumbled and Eaton secured the ball. By a few sharp rushes Wesleyan forced the ball within a foot of Princeton's goal. Hughes carried the ball over but the touchdown was not allowed. Steelman got the ball and in the finest play of the game wormed himself under and through the Princeton team and scored. During the rest of the game Princeton played sturdily and steadily increased her score. In the second half, Ames made a beautiful run of fifty yards through the entire Wesleyan team for a touchdown.

Again there was a great deal of bickering over the Yale game. The Faculty again refused to allow the game to be played in New York. As Yale had insisted last year that the game be played in New Haven with a Yale referee, Princeton made a similar demand this year. Yale made a counter proposal to play at Princeton with a Yale referee or in New York with a Princeton referee. Of course Princeton refused and stood by their first demand. Then Yale replied that they could not accept it and it seemed as if the game would not be played. Two days before the proposed date, W. C. Camp, '80, and G. Adey, '67, of Yale, and R. M. Hodge, '86, and C. W. Bird, '85, of Princeton, met in New York and agreed to the Princeton terms, which the Yale team then accepted. Six thousand people came to Princeton—the largest crowd the field had ever held.

There was a long delay before Mr. T. H. Harris, '86, could be persuaded to serve in the thankless position of referee, and the rain had thoroughly chilled all the spectators before the game began.

*Draw Game. Called on account of darkness.

1—Touchdown by Wallace.

Corbin dribbled the ball to Beecher who made a pretty run of ten yards. At a second attempt Beecher lost the ball and H. Hodge started the play for Princeton by a pass to Ames, who was neatly downed by Wallace. On the third down Princeton voluntarily lost ten yards to keep possession of the ball. R. Hodge then passed poorly to Savage who was tackled for a loss on the Princeton ten-yard line, but Savage at once punted to Yale's thirty-yard line. After an exchange of kicks, the ball was advanced to Yale's ten-yard line, where Yale held. But Savage touched it down ten yards back and later tried for goal but was thrown before he could kick. H. Hodge gained twenty yards, but Ames lost ten, and Savage was forced to kick again. Twice after that Yale voluntarily gave up ten yards rather than give up the ball. Then the play was transferred to Princeton's territory and R. Hodge was downed by Beecher four feet from Princeton's goal. When the teams lined up the ball was sent back to Savage to kick, but he fumbled and Corwin fell on it. But the touchdown was not allowed for the ball had not been put into play, for the Yale centre had kicked it back before George could snap it in the proper manner. When the first half ended the ball was in the middle of the field.

The second half lasted for twenty-five minutes, in the hardest kind of rain. Neither of the teams could play well on account of the muddy and slippery condition of the ground; the water had collected in puddles on the field and the men, after a hard tackle, looked as if they had emerged from a mud bath. This gave an advantage to Yale, for their heavy weights would gain ground by sliding from their momentum, even when tackled. But Princeton had trusted to dodging and were compelled to adopt the bucking game in which their light weight handicapped them. Princeton started the play by their usual "V" trick which was but partially successful. Yale soon got the ball and forced the playing into Princeton's territory where it continued until time was called. After twenty minutes of the play the ball was passed to Watkinson for a try at goal which failed. When the ball bounded over the line, it touched Savage but Wallace fell on it for a touchdown. The spectators rushed on the field and it was fully fifteen minutes before play was resumed. After five minutes the referee stopped the play on account of darkness and declared the contest "No game" because two full halves had not been played. That evening, the Football Convention met, and after three hours of heated discussion, the Princeton and Yale delegates withdrew and the remaining colleges passed the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, That this Convention cannot as a Convention award the championship for 1886.

RESOLVED, That Yale, according to the points scored, should have won the championship.

It was in this game that Princeton first used a "V" defensive formation to stop Yale's rushes. R. M. Hodge, '86, had invented the scheme, which is based on the principle of the arch, while watching the Yale-Harvard game of the same year.

The first game of the season was the Lafayette game of October 8. Princeton played better than the small score indicates, but the referee enforced severely the rules against interference and fouls. With the exception of the third, all the touchdowns were made by rushes. For the third, Ames kicked far up the field and the Lafayette full back muffed the ball, and Irvine secured it on the five-yard line, from which Price made a touchdown. The last score was made by Ames, who dropped a goal from the field at the thirty-yard line. Before time was called, Ames and Church carried the ball over the line; but the touchdown was not allowed on account of a foul.

A number of men accompanied the team to New Brunswick and were much disgusted at the exhibition of playing and refereeing. The referee seemed totally ignorant of the rules of the game, and as a result, made many glaring mistakes, which were decidedly not in favor of Princeton; while, from start to finish, the Rutgers team played a block game to kill time. They succeeded so well in this that out of the hour's play, Princeton had the ball hardly ten minutes, during which she gave a fine exhibition of rushing and blocking; the ball was scarcely down before it was in a half back's or a rusher's hand and advanced up the field.

The Lehigh game showed a disposition on the part of the rush line to tackle high. The fumbling of the backs was inexcusable. Lehigh won the admiration of the spectators by playing an open and aggressive game, not attempting to kill time. After attempting to rush the ball Lehigh punted, and when Payne fumbled Lehigh secured the ball. Irvine blocked the kick and the ball was at once rushed down the field for the first touchdown. Lehigh attempted again to rush the ball, but Irvine secured it on a fumble and carried it to the twenty-five yard line. On the third down Cowan crossed the line for the second touchdown. The third touchdown was made by Ames, who caught the ball from a kick on Princeton's thirty-yard line and ran through the opposing team for the down. Before the half closed Princeton scored fifty points. Though Princeton played with even less spirit in the second half, Lehigh weakened and forty points were added to the score.

1st Half (30 mins.) 1—Goal by Ames; 3 mins. 2—Touchdown by Payne; goal; 3 mins. 3—Touchdown by Payne; goal. 4—Touchdown by Cowan; goal; 10 mins. 5—Touchdown by Ames; goal.

On October 19, Pennsylvania started the game with the ball but immediately lost it on downs. On Princeton's first play Price made fifteen yards through centre. On the third down the ball was given to Ames, who kicked a goal from the field. Good tackles by Ross and Spaeth held Princeton, but later Payne went through Graham and Sypher for a touchdown. Pennsylvania then tried some trick passes but Graham was forced to kick. On a free kick Ames dribbled the ball to Church who carried it twenty yards before downed by Windsor. Pennsylvania secured the ball on downs and it was passed to Colloday who made a brilliant run of fifty yards. For ten minutes the play was in Princeton's territory, then Price scored a touchdown after runs by Ames and Cowan. Good runs and a fake kick enabled Pennsylvania to carry the ball to Princeton's ten-yard line. The ball was passed to Payne who was thrown behind his goal line by Zeigler, but the referee did not allow the safety. A minute later a touch-in-goal was made which Pennsylvania declared was a safety. Before the half closed Cowan and Payne had scored two more touchdowns for Princeton.

In the second half Pennsylvania played very loosely and allowed Princeton to score seven touchdowns.

1st Half (30 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Ames; goal; 7 mins. 2—Touchdown by Cowan; 16 mins. 3—Touchdown by Black; goal; 23 mins. 4—Touchdown by Cowan; goal; 28 mins.

2d Half. 5—Touchdown by Ames; goal; 3 mins. 6—Touchdown by Cowan; goal; 8 mins. 7—Touchdown by Cowan. 8—Touchdown by Cowan; goal. 9—Touchdown by Payne.

Three days later Pennsylvania played the return game at Princeton. Pennsylvania had improved very much and for twenty minutes of the second half kept the ball in Princeton territory. At the opening of the game, the Pennsylvania backs were forced toward their own goal, where the ball was passed to Colloday, but by the quick blocking of the Princeton rushers Ames secured the ball and scored. Princeton secured the ball on downs and Cowan scored the second touchdown after runs by Payne, Hancock and Ames. The third touchdown was scored by Black who broke through the line and secured the ball on a pass. In the middle of the field Princeton got the ball on downs, Cowan carried it twenty-five yards, Payne twenty, and then Cowan rushed over for the last score of the first half. Each side fumbled several times when play began in the second half, but after four minutes Ames made a beautiful run for a touchdown. Through a fumble by Janeway, Pennsylvania secured the ball near Princeton's goal, but Ross passed it over Graham's head and Cowan picking it up ran the length of the field for another touchdown. After another touchdown by Cowan, came the hardest and prettiest playing of the day. The tackling of Bowser and Spaeth, and Graham's kicking carried the ball from the two-yard line to Princeton's ten-yard line; but there the fumble came and Cowan scored. For ten minutes the ball remained in the centre of the field but just before time was called Payne ran through the entire opposing line for the final touchdown.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames. 2—Safety by Wesleyan. 3—Touchdown by Ames; goal. 4—Touchdown by Ames; goal. 5—Touchdown by Channing. 6—Touchdown by Price; goal. 7—Touchdown by Price. 8—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames.

2d Half. 9—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames. 10—Touchdown by Price; goal. 11—Touchdown by George; goal. 12—Touchdown by Ames; goal. 13—Goal by Ames (40 yards).

The first championship game was that with Wesleyan. It was a very open game, full of punts and long end runs. The ball was dribbled to Cowan, then Ames carried it to the twenty-five yard line and Cowan secured the first touchdown. After an exchange of punts, the ball was lost by Princeton on a forward pass and Manchester punted. Ames ran the kick back to the five-yard line but Wesleyan received the ball on the fourth down; though they were forced immediately to make a safety. Wesleyan kicked and two runs by Ames gave Princeton another touchdown. George broke through the Wesleyan line and fell on the ball. Then Ames ran around the end for another touchdown. Princeton was again held for four downs, but soon Wesleyan kicked and Channing ran the ball back for a touchdown. George blocked a kick and after a long run by Channing, Price went through the line for another touchdown. Again Wesleyan's kick was blocked and long runs by Cowan, Ames and Price yielded a touchdown. The half closed with another touchdown by Cowan. In the opening of the second half, Ballentine secured the ball out of bounds; Ames made a short run and Cowan followed with a long run and a touchdown. The ball was again worked down towards the Wesleyan goal but Ames failed to kick a goal from the field. Wesleyan returned the ball and Ames passed it to Hodge who lost it. Smith secured the ball and made one of the prettiest runs of the day through Princeton's entire rush line, but was downed by Channing. After three downs Wesleyan punted and Price made a free catch; then he ran to the five-yard line and on the next play, ran around the end for another touchdown. Smith made another long run but Wesleyan fumbled and Princeton forced the ball back into Wesleyan's territory where Ames failed in his second attempt to kick a goal from the field. Long punts by Ames and fumble by the Wesleyan backs added another touchdown to Princeton's score. Ames tried twice to kick a goal from the field, but the ball passed outside of the post. Later Price carried the ball almost to Wesleyan's line, but lost it in crossing the goal line. Again Ames tried to kick a goal, but the sixth time he was successful, dropping a goal from the forty-yard line, and making the last score of the game.

The second championship game, against Pennsylvania, was played with four substitutes. After several bad passes by Pennsylvania, Channing scored the first touchdown. No sooner had the ball been put into play than another bad pass gave it to Princeton; but they in turn lost it on off-side play. Pennsylvania at once fumbled and Ames, getting the ball, scored. More fumbles gave Price the third touchdown. Such play continued throughout the game and gave Princeton ninety-five points.

line where Holden ran and Cowan tackled him. Cowan was ruled off the field by the umpire because his hands slipped below the knees after the tackle. Church then took Cowan's place and Chapin played left tackle. The loss of Princeton's best rusher and consequent change of position destroyed their effectiveness and in connection with the heavy weight of Harvard's backs, lost the game. Ames ran around the end for ten yards and then began the first of a series of long punts which were a feature of the game. During the half Harvard pressed down to Princeton's goal line six times but were unable to score. The first time a good run of Ames advanced the ball to the twenty-five yard line. Ru-hes and a punt, with Harvard's fumble, gave Princeton the ball in the middle of the field and Channing gained ten yards. Then the ball was punted down into Harvard's territory, where the ball was given to Princeton on downs and Hancock made five yards. Then Channing dodged twenty yards. Short rushes by Ames, and Price and Irvine's good use of his arms while running landed the ball on Harvard's five-yard line. But Harvard held; when Holden kicked, Hancock got the ball on the ten-yard line, only to lose it on a fumble. By sheer force of weight Harvard pushed her backs to the centre of the field, where a good tackle by Speer gave Princeton the ball on three downs. After it had changed hands, the ball was again taken into Harvard's territory. Ames punted to the ten-yard line, but heavy rushes carried it well up the field where George secured it. Ames kicked to Harvard's twenty-yard line, but the ball was steadily advanced by short rushes of the Harvard backs. Princeton kicked to centre, where the sharpness of Irvine's play and the tackling of Hancock, Speer and George, broke up Harvard's rush line tricks. The half closed with the ball on Princeton's thirty-yard line in Harvard's possession.

The second half opened auspiciously for Princeton by a gain of twenty yards by the "V" trick, but Harvard took the ball on the fourth down. Twice the ball changed hands for the same reason. It was secured again desperately close to Princeton's line and Harvard carried it across but the touchdown was not allowed because of holding in the rush line. Ames ran the ball out to the twenty-five yard line. Then Bancroft was ruled off for slugging. Ames kicked to midfield and advanced it still further by runs and penalties for Harvard's offside plays. Steady rushing by Boyd and Porter and the charging of the Harvard line took the ball close to the Princeton goal. Ames punted to the twenty-five yard line where Porter took it on the run, carried it close to the goal and on the next play rushed it over for a touchdown. Later Ames kicked from the thirty-five yard line, and Boyd, running hard and fast, caught the ball on the thirty-five yard line, and by the splendid interfering of the entire Harvard team, scored the final touchdown.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Graves; goal by Bull.
 2d Half. 2—Touchdown by Wallace; goal by Bull.

Princeton was defeated on November 19 by Yale in the most scientific football game that had ever been played in New York. Yale won the game by kicking the ball constantly and following it well. Princeton on the other hand did not kick effectively at critical points, but excelled in rush line tricks and in blocking the tricks of Yale. Yale's weight enabled her to rush straight ahead, while Princeton gained ground in rushing by stratagem.

Cowan's general play including both tackling and running has never been excelled. Again and again he saved Princeton from losing the ball by his powerful rushes.

Princeton opened the game with the "V" trick which gave Ames ten yards, and the ball was carried to Yale's twenty-five yard line. After Yale's punt, the ball was Princeton's in midfield. A fumble lost twenty yards and Graves carried the ball to the centre of the field. It was advanced to Princeton's thirty-five yard line but Yale lost it immediately on a foul. Half a dozen kicks were exchanged, and the ball changed hands several times but still remained in Princeton's territory. Wallace touched the ball down behind the Princeton goal but the score was not allowed as he was offside. Beecher and Wurtemberg worked the ball well toward Princeton's goal and a fine opening by Carter and Gill, let Graves through for a touch down.

Princeton tried the "V" trick again but Bull sent the ball back to Princeton's twenty-five yard line. Ames punted and Wurtemberg fumbled on Yale's twenty-five yard line but fell on the ball before the Princeton rushers came up.

The second half opened with fine runs by the Princeton backs. Yale soon forced Princeton back and Ames, muffing a kick, was downed three yards from the Princeton goal line. Corbin and Wallace blocked his kick by sheer weight and dropped on the ball over the line. Ten yards were gained by the "V" trick and Price gained twenty more, but Ames was forced to punt, and the ball was returned to Princeton's twenty-five yard line. But Ames kicked out of bounds in Yale's territory. Kicks were again exchanged and Cowan made a beautiful run one-quarter length of field. For the rest of the game there were many kicks and rushes, but neither side had the advantage.

The season was opened a little earlier than usual, with the Lehigh game on September 29. Princeton started off with the "V" trick, gained ten yards, and after a few passes, Mowry took the ball across the line, making the first touchdown. The second goal was more stubbornly disputed, but finally Ames ran through Lehigh's rush line for the touchdown. Poe ran half the length of the field for the third touchdown. Then Lehigh showed poor judgment in passing the ball and Princeton got it frequently on these fumbles, one of which enabled Cook to score. Two runs by Irvine and Cowan gained the fifth touchdown. Then Ames kicked a goal from the field and S. Hodge made another touchdown before the half closed. In the second half six touchdowns were scored through Lehigh's line.

Princeton, 31. Crescents, 0.

1st Half. 1—Goal by Ames; 5 mins. 2—Touchdown by Cowan. 3—Touchdown by Cowan; goal.

2d Half. 4—Touchdown by Ames. 5—Safety by Crescents. 6—Touchdown by Cowan. 7—Touchdown by Mowry; goal.

The second game, against the Crescents, was played in a pouring rain before a very small audience. The opponents and the referee seemed to care little for the rules, especially against fouling. Short runs by Channing, Black and Ames carried the ball down the field far enough for Ames to kick a goal. The second touchdown was scored by Cowan after a twenty-five yard run. Ames attempted to kick another goal from the field, but his foot slipped on the wet ball. Cowan secured another touchdown by blocking Dennen's kick. In the second half Ames scored by good dodging. Then the Crescents were forced to make a safety. When Princeton secured the ball again, Cowan rushed it over. The rain was coming down in torrents. Foot by foot Princeton forced the ball over the slippery ground and Mowry, by a dive, made the last touchdown.

1st Half. 1—Goal by Ames; 8 mins. 2—Touchdown by Mowry; goal by Ames; 25 mins. 3—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames; 30 mins. 4—Touchdown by Black. 5—Touchdown by Mowry; goal.

2d Half. 6—Touchdown by Cook; goal. 7—Touchdown by Ames. 8—Touchdown by Black; goal. 9—Touchdown by Hodge; goal. 10—Touchdown by George; goal.

The Pennsylvania game was opened with the usual "V" formation that resulted in a gain of ten yards. After an exchange of kicks the runs of Mowry and Cowan placed the ball on the Pennsylvania twenty-five yard line, but there it stayed for three downs; then Ames kicked a goal from the field. After a thirty yard run by Cowan, Princeton was forced to kick, but Wagenhurst blocked it and Bowser secured the ball for Pennsylvania. Then for five minutes the ball was kicked back and forth from mid-field to Princeton's goal until Black caught it and made a run of thirty yards. The ball was again lost to Pennsylvania and Hulme made a long and brilliant run of half the field, but was prevented from scoring by a lucky tackle of Ames. From this point Princeton rushed the playing up the field into Pennsylvania's territory and finally Black, by a good charge, scored the first touchdown. After this Pennsylvania's playing grew gradually weaker and her men seemed to lose all the spirit and vim with which they had entered the game. Their blocking became loose and their tackling weak, while Princeton's playing grew stronger and more effective every minute. Their dependence was placed on their rushers who proved themselves worthy of it. Before the half closed three more touchdowns had been scored. The difference in the teams was more apparent in the second half and then Princeton played to make a large score.

Touchdowns: Mowry 4; Janeway 2; Black 2; Cowan 1; Channing 1; Bovaird 1. Goals from field: Ames 4. Goals from touchdowns: Ames 7; Safety 1.

The game with Stevens was a wretched exhibition of football and called forth the severest criticism of the team. Stevens began to play in a slow and listless manner and Princeton followed suit. There was absolutely no team play; and there was little, if any, discipline. No attempt was made to run around the ends and all the backs fumbled frequently.

2d Half (18 mins.) 6—Touchdown by Ames; goal; 8 mins. 7—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames.

The first score in the Pennsylvania game on October 20, was a safety by Pennsylvania. Then Ames, Cowan, and Channing made long runs, resulting in a touchdown. When the play was started, Pennsylvania made fifteen yards, but then lost the ball on downs. When Princeton had carried the ball down near the Pennsylvania goal, the opponents held them for four downs. After the kick Ames and Mowry ran the ball back and Cowan carried it across the goal line. After costly fumbles on each side Ames made the third touchdown. Later he failed in his attempt to kick a goal from the field.

Before the half closed Cook made another touchdown. In the second half Princeton received the ball on the fourth down. George and Cowan made good gains through the centre and Ames ran around the end for a touchdown. The last touchdown was made by Cowan.

In the first half of the game with Rutgers on October 24, Princeton did much loose playing, fumbling the ball frequently, losing it on four downs and giving Rutgers many chances. But in the second half the men went into the work with a will and played a far stronger and sharper game, gaining ground on nearly every rush.

The Johns Hopkins players were too light for the Princeton rushers, and the large score is due to the weakness of the opponents rather than to the strong playing of the Princeton men. The first half opened with the "V" trick, and Cook, aided by Channing, rushed the game across the line for the first touchdown. Then followed a goal from the field by Ames.

The fifth game in the championship series was won from Wesleyan by 44 to 0, but it made the Princeton backers feel sick, for it was full of faults. The men tackled high, were unsteady in blocking, lost the ball when tackled, and failed to kick when needed. The score was made more by blocking of kicks than by good rushes. Wesleyan played a hard game with plenty of snap and outkicked their opponents. Only one man was said to have done creditable work on the Princeton team. Twice during the second half Wesleyan nearly scored.

2d Half (45 mins.) 5—Touchdown by Channing. 6—Touchdown by Channing; goal by Ames. 7—Touchdown by Channing. 8—Touchdown by Bovaird. 9—Touchdown by Cowan; goal by Ames.

The first touchdown was made on a blocked kick after much fumbling; and Wesleyan held Princeton several times for four downs. Short runs by Ames, Cowan, Black and Channing resulted in another touchdown. Wesleyan's kick was blocked by Bovaird who touched the ball down behind their line. After a gain of ten yards Wesleyan kicked and Princeton made a touch-back. Then Ames ran more than half the length of the field but Black lost the ball. Later the ball was batted over the line but Wesleyan made a touch back. Bovaird made another touchdown on a blocked kick. Wesleyan kicked, R. Hodge lost the ball on a bad pass and Wesleyan had the ball on Princeton's five-yard line. Heath made three yards; then Princeton held. Before the first half ended Channing had downed the ball on Wesleyan's five-yard line. In the second half Princeton continued to tackle high and Wesleyan, by long passes, made good gains around the ends. Twice it looked as if Wesleyan would score, but on both occasions McDonald was downed near the goal by R. Hodge and Ames.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Ames.

Despite the rain, an attempt was made to play the Pennsylvania game on November 10, but after Ames had made a touchdown, the grounds were in such poor condition for playing that the Pennsylvania captain intentionally delayed the game for more than five minutes and the referee awarded it to Princeton.

On November 17, Harvard was defeated at Princeton. The Princeton team was in splendid condition and played almost a perfect game during the first half; but in the second they became careless. Harvard's lighter rush line could make no gains against Princeton, who rushed the ball down the field yard by yard. Only twice during the first half was the ball outside of Harvard's territory. There was a good deal of slugging on each side and Harding was ruled off for tripping.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Cook; 13 mins. 2—Touchdown by Black; 32 mins. 3—Touchdown by Cowan; 43 mins.

2d Half. 4—Touchdown by Bovaird; goal by Hodge. 5—Touchdown by Davis; goal by Sears; 43 mins.

Harvard began the game with the "V" trick and gained five yards, then Sears kicked. Cowan, Janeway and Cook advanced the ball twenty yards, but Harvard secured it on a foul and kicks were exchanged. Princeton then worked the ball down to Harvard's ten-yard line where Harvard secured it. J. Harding attempted to pass the ball to Sears but Cook fell on it for the first touchdown. In the try at goal Ames missed the posts by two feet.

When play was resumed, Princeton secured the ball on downs but gave it up for interference. Harvard advanced for ten yards, but Princeton secured the ball for a similar offense. Ames and Sears exchanged punts, and Janeway downed the ball on the forty-yard line. Ames tried to kick a goal from the field, but the rushers did not hold and the kick was blocked. After a few gains Princeton was forced to punt. Then Harvard was held for four downs on her twenty-yard line. Again Ames' kick was blocked. The ball was rushed up to within two yards of the line. Black struck Harvard's centre like a battering ram and went straight through, scoring the second touchdown. Harvard advanced the ball into Princeton territory, but Ames out-punted Sears, who fumbled and Cowan fell on the ball. Ames advanced it twenty yards, and again seven; a five yard dive by Black and the ball was downed on Harvard's ten-yard line, from which Cowan easily scored the third touchdown.

In the second half, with wind and sun in her favor, Harvard played a kicking game. She advanced the ball to Princeton's ten-yard line but lost it. Ames punted forty yards, but it was returned to Princeton's fifteen-yard line. After advancing it ten yards the ball went to Harvard for off-side play. Kicks were made. Cook was disqualified for hitting Harding and Speer took his place. Mowry muffed a kick and Harvard had the ball on Princeton's five-yard line. But it was lost on a fumble and Ames kicked on the return. Mowry was forced to make a touch-back. Ames punted, Sears returned, Ames punted again and Sears fumbled. Bovaird caught the ball and with a clear field, ran thirty yards for the fourth touchdown. When the ball was in play again Ames made one of the prettiest runs ever seen on a football field. Running in a V-shaped track with the apex at his right hand side of the field, he passed the whole Harvard team with the exception of Sears and gained forty-five yards. Harvard secured the ball at her twenty-five yard line. Later Mowry was forced to make another touch-back. Ames kicked to Sears, who returned it, and Ames muffing it, Davis secured it on a run making Harvard's only touchdown.

In this game Princeton adopted a new style of play. Hitherto the arrangement of the men on the field and the qualifications of a player were radically different from those of the present day.

FOOTBALL, 1888.

D. Bovaird, '80.

In the old game, when on the defensive, both the half backs played a great distance behind the line, with the full back still further. The quarter back also was some distance from the line and was expected to cover both sides. When on the offensive, the backs came up to within from twelve to fifteen yards of the line, taking the ball from a long pass and relying on dodging and warding off to make their ground. In those days the tackling was high, making it easy to ward off with the hand; of course on the introduction of low tackling, a new form of play became necessary. Under the old game Princeton had proved herself able, despite the comparatively few number of her students, to play the best of football, even with a light team, and carry off a big share of the championships.

But now it became evident that the days of successful individual play and light rush lines were passing away, and a new system must be devised by which to protect the runner and help him through the opposing line.

Two new "V" formations were invented by R. M. Hodge, '86, and S. C. Hodge, '88. These scrimmage plays must not be confused with the "flying wedge," also invented by R. M. Hodge and used in opening the games in 1884. The first new play was a solid triangle of men with the ball within it and the triangle moving with the apex forward. This was suggested to Hodge by the "flying wedge" already described, but still more by the formation used in college rushes, imported to America from the schools of England. The play was used first in the Yale game and never failed to gain ground. The tackle was the apex, one half-back ran behind and against one of his shoulders, the other tackle behind and against his other, the man with the ball behind and against his back and another back behind and against the back of the man with the ball. This was the most effective play in football for several years and is still, allowing for the variations with which it is characterized. It was not used the next year in the Harvard game, when the first half went against Princeton.

But it was reserved for the Yale game of the next year (1889) and was used against Cowan's back (at tackle) only, and was the last resort throughout the game to gain ground, and always with success. To Captain Poe's generalship and this play Cowan used to attribute that victory. Yale copied the play in comically crude fashion that game and gained no ground with it. It was spilled by being attacked in flank.

The third "V" trick defeated Harvard in this game of 1888, but it was ruled out of the Yale game. It was a split-the-line-open play, invented for the Harvard game by S. C. Hodge, '88. R. M. Hodge, '86, writes: "The end rush boxed the tackle of the other side, and a half back ran out and met the enemy's end rush and carried him towards the side lines with a butt with the top of his head, and the man with the ball went through tackle and end, with or without an escort for interference as desired. This has been the most used of all football plays ever since, unless possibly the real wedge, just mentioned. For several years it almost caused the wedge-play to go unnoticed. It is the more brilliant play, and against any but the best teams is always more effective than the wedge-play. But it is easier to defeat than the wedge. When successful it gains a great deal of ground at a time. It is Napoleon's method of assault which you will find described in Hugo's description of Waterloo. He sent a flying column at an angle to the point he meant to attack, and another from the other side at an angle to the same point in front of his main column, which then went forward to the same point, now an opening, marching at right angles to the enemy's line. But my brother knew nothing of this and simply developed the old football play of tackle and end trying to insinuate their bodies between the tackle and end of the enemy and then spreading for an opening—a task which required too much individual superiority in rushers to be reliable. I may say too that lacrosse was not without its influence in the development of these football plays as it anticipated football in the principle of attempting to get a majority of men at the point of attack. And my brother and I had this lacrosse habit by playing before we did anything in developing football plays. Yale made a crude and vain copy of this play in 1889, and Princeton did not use it as well as in 1888, and only rarely. In 1890 and 1891 Yale used it well and defeated Princeton badly."

The use of these plays led eventually to team interference. But the interference was yet by no means perfect. The runner was protected until he reached the line, where he found an opening to pass through, but when once on the other side, he was expected to take care of himself. The one great argument against the exclusive use of such a system is the amount of wearing work it requires. The rush line must be exceptionally heavy and strong to stand the strain through an hour and a half.

In this same season Princeton inaugurated another new plan—namely, the bringing up of one of the half backs into the line when on the defensive. This move proved so effective that it was followed more or less by all first-class elevens in the next few years. When on the offensive she brought her backs up close to the line and near the centre in direct opposition to the old custom of playing them well back and out toward the end. The idea embodied in the change was to bring the man who was to take the ball closer to the quarter back, thus doing away with the necessity of long and uncertain passes. According to the new method, the ball was simply tossed to the half back, except when he was to go through the centre, when he took it out of the hands of the quarter back. This close play of the half backs and the continual use of the "V" created the necessity of contracting the line and of close blocking. The newness and excellence of this game was proved by the fact that in the following year, Yale gave up the old game and virtually adopted this, attempting to make openings by means of interference, playing her backs very close to the line when in the offensive and bringing them into the line when on the defensive.

2d Half (44 mins.) 2—Goal from field by Bull; (25 yds.)

Again there was difficulty in deciding whether the Yale game should be played on Saturday or on Thanksgiving Day, but Yale, in consideration of the circumstances, courteously agreed to play on Saturday.

On that day Yale defeated Princeton 10—0, in the presence of 12,000 people. Princeton was very weak in kicking. The rush line was almost perfect; its great strength being displayed particularly in the second half when it drove Yale steadily backward step by step for fifty yards. The play of the team was most seriously hampered by the manifest unfairness of the umpire, by warning one of Princeton's strongest rushers before the game that he intended to watch him especially. He of course took all of the spirit out of this player's work and caused him to be unduly cautious lest he should be ruled off the field. His decisions against Princeton were given without exceptions, at times when they were fatal to Princeton's success, while those against Yale were given when the ball was in the middle of the field and consequently of no great injury to her. Twice when the ball was within Yale's ten-yard line, did the umpire give the ball to Yale for alleged foul play by Princeton.

During the first half the "V" tricks were used six times, resulting twice in gains of ten yards, and four times in gains of five yards. The game started with the "flying wedge," followed by two successive split-the-line-open plays. In fifteen seconds and these three plays Princeton had the ball one foot from the Yale goal line. But both the scrimmage "V" plays were declared foul. Then too Yale had sent men down to watch the Princeton-Harvard game and in the intervening week had developed a defense against these peculiar formations. Yale attempted to advance the ball around the ends and through openings made by means of holding in the line. But these methods were unsuccessful and the game was finally won by the superior kicking of Bull. In spite of Yale's preparation, Princeton repeatedly carried the ball half the length of the field and sometimes a longer distance, by her systematic rushing, but she had not the strength left to carry it over the line. Black ran around the end for forty yards, Channing made twenty on a trick, and Cowan ran around the end, being stopped only six inches from the goal line. The umpire ordered the ball back, not to the place where Cowan started but where Channing started, alleging that two downs before there had been off-side play by Princeton. Yet he had waited before putting the penalty until Princeton had made the two greatest single advances of the game and put the ball where a touchdown was no less than a certainty. Runs by Hefflefinger and Graves returned the ball to the forty-five yard line where punts were exchanged. Then from the twenty-five yard line Bull kicked a beautiful goal.

In the second half Princeton rushed the thirty-five yards with hardly a single second down, but was held on Yale's twenty-five yard line. After the exchange of punts, Princeton advanced the ball to Yale's ten yard line where it was given to Yale for interference. Ames tried for goal from the twenty-five yard line but failed and later Bull failed from Princeton's twenty-five yard line. Hodge made ten yards, Ames forty and Channing twenty-five. Then the umpire blasted Princeton's hopes by giving the ball to Yale for alleged interference. Cowan was disqualified for holding a man until he heard "down." Again Bull failed to kick a goal from thirty-yard line. Then Princeton tried the "V" trick again but unsuccessfully. Yale forced the ball to the twenty-five-yard line where a few seconds before time was called Bull kicked another goal from the field.

against the University of Pennsylvania and Wesleyan were won easily; in the latter game every Princeton player but one made a touchdown.

A consciousness of weakness perhaps, or a desire for reform, led Yale to make the first advance in the fight against "Professionalism" which was so fiercely waged this year and which ended in the withdrawal of Harvard from the Intercollegiate League. As a result Princeton did not meet Harvard again in football until 1892, nor in baseball until 1895. The intercollegiate relations of Harvard and Princeton between 1877 and 1886 were of an ideal character. But in 1887, an unfriendly feeling arose from the conduct of certain members of the Harvard nine upon the Princeton field. The breach was widened by a series of retaliations in which Princeton was much to blame. For instance in 1888, the Harvard Football Treasurer justly protested that the receipts of the Princeton-Harvard game had been withheld until late in the winter. This was simply a repetition of a similar delay which had occurred on the side of Harvard the year before.

Again, this fall Princeton declined to send a list of the football players in advance to Cambridge; but the previous year the names of the Harvard team were kept back until 11:30 a. m., although the game began at 3 p. m.

Yale, seconded by Wesleyan, called for a meeting of the Intercollegiate Graduate Advisory Committee to determine the amateur standing of certain members of the Princeton and Harvard teams. Throughout the investigation Yale maintained admirable neutrality, first, by consenting, after the Harvard game, to waive all protests against Princeton players until the regular spring meeting of the Association; and secondly, by refusing to form a dual athletic league with Harvard to the exclusion of Princeton.

At this meeting of the Intercollegiate Graduate Advisory Committee on November 4, strict rules of eligibility were adopted.

While Princeton, through its representative, Duncan Edwards, '85, favored the spirit of these resolutions, yet it was violently opposed to their adoption without warning during the middle of the football season. According to Article III of the Constitution, no change or resolution could go into effect before it had been finally approved by the Graduate Advisory Committee at its regular meeting in May. Otherwise a college would have no guarantee that on the eve of the final contest arbitrary resolutions might not change the rules under which one of the teams had been training throughout the entire season.

Harvard, however, taking the position that these rules went into effect at once, entered a protest against fifteen of the Princeton players, including K. L. Ames, '90, E. O. Wagenhurst, '88, and W. J. George, '89. In retaliation, Princeton protested four Harvard players (Dean, Cranston, Stickney and Upton).

The Advisory Committee met again November 14, two days before the Harvard game. All of the protested players had filed the required affidavits, denying the charges, and had also been summoned to appear before the committee for oral examination as to their record. Princeton then proposed certain rules which would affect all the colleges alike, but these were felt to be too wide sweeping and the purpose of the meeting was narrowed down to an investigation of the protested men. The Harvard men who had been summoned were present but the Princeton men refused to come, because they said that according to the constitution they could not be summoned for oral examination until two days after the filing of their affidavits, whereas their affidavits had not yet been examined. On this ground Princeton raised the point of order that the meeting was unconstitutional, and in this Princeton was supported by the University of Pennsylvania and Wesleyan. So the meeting disbanded and it was too late to take any action before the game. Yet Princeton showed its true position with regard to professionalism by removing Wagenhurst from the team, 1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Crosby. 3—Touchdown by Channing. 3—Goal from field by Trafford. 4—Touchdown by Channing; goal by Ames. 5—Touchdown by Lee.

2d Half. 6—Safety by Trafford. 7—Goal from field by Ames. 8—Touchdown by Ames; goal by Ames. 9—Touchdown by Cowan. 10—Touchdown by Channing. 11—Touchdown by Cowan. 12—Touchdown by Cash.

The Harvard game was played at Cambridge on November 16. The opening of the game predicted a hard struggle for Princeton. After Princeton had lost the ball on a fumble, Crosby got it in midfield, and dodging the whole team, scored a touchdown. This seemed to put life into Harvard's men and throughout the half they played a strong offensive game. However it was her turn to fumble, and Channing broke through her line for Princeton's first touchdown. Princeton lacked spirit in playing, and lost so much ground in exchanging punts that Trafford was brought near enough Princeton's line to kick a goal from the field. When the ball was put in play again, Princeton forced it toward Harvard's goal. The Harvard rushers could not hold back big Cowan, and soon Channing made another touchdown from which Ames kicked a goal. Then Lee of Harvard made three splendid runs and crossed the goal line, making the score in Harvard's favor 15 to 10. Harvard now forced the ball down to Princeton's five-yard line, from which Trafford failed to kick a goal.

In the second half the tables were completely turned. Princeton went at her opponent with a rush and soon had her completely at her mercy. Harvard was forced back until Trafford was compelled to make a safety; and a little later Ames made the score 17 to 15 by kicking a goal from the field. The Harvard team then went to pieces. When the ball was brought to the centre of the field Princeton quickly got it and Ames made a phenomenal run for a touchdown. After an exchange of kicks, Cowan got the ball and went through the Harvard team for another touchdown. Trafford had just time enough to kick the ball out when Poe got it and gained twenty-five yards. Harvard could not gain an inch and in less than five minutes Cowan made another touchdown. Channing made a splendid run and then Ames made the rush of the game. He caught a punt in front of his own goal and ran about twenty yards, then slipped and fell. Before anyone could tackle him he was up again, running like a deer, and was downed only when directly in front of Harvard's goal. Here Harvard braced, but soon the ball went again to Princeton and a touchdown resulted. The crowd was pressing on the field and darkness was coming fast when Ames got the ball and again ran the length of the field. Cash broke through and made a touchdown from which Ames kicked a goal—and the game was won—chiefly by Ames' terrific rushes and his phenomenal kicking. Donnelly and Riggs were disqualified for slugging through the game.

Harvard now withdrew from the Intercollegiate Football Association and endeavored, but in vain, to draw Yale out also, into an exclusive dual league. The official correspondence and full statement of the particulars of this controversy can be found in full in Appendix A.

1st Half (45 mins.).
2d Half (45 mins.). 1—Touchdown by Warren; goal by Ames. 2—Touchdown by Cowan.

In the game on November 28, Yale was fortunate enough to win the toss and took advantage of the strong western wind. Princeton tried to force the ball down the field but Ames was compelled to kick. Cowan secured the ball on a fumble and ran twenty yards, but the ball went to Yale on a foul. Princeton held Yale on the thirty-yard line, only to lose the ball again on a fumble. Yale tried the "V"-formation, once gaining four yards, again five yards, but later it was stopped without gain. Ames made a twenty-five yard gain, and then tried for goal, but McBride got the ball on Yale's ten-yard line. Yale tried to rush it out, but was forced to kick. And the half closed with no score. In the early part of the second half McClung tried for goal and the ball falling short was secured by Yale on Princeton's ten-yard line. But they were unable to gain and Ames punted to the forty-yard line. By sheer force of strength and team play Princeton advanced to Yale's ten-yard line. Then Ames made a bad fumble and lost twenty yards, but Channing saved the ball and on the next play

Ames tried for a goal from the field. His kick went low and the ball rolled over Yale's goal line. McBride fumbled it and Warren fell on it, securing the first touchdown of the game from which Ames kicked an exceedingly difficult goal. There were fifteen minutes left to play and Yale played desperately. Hartwell secured the ball on a fumble and McClung endeavored to kick a goal from Princeton's thirty-yard line but the ball struck the post and bounded back. A little later McClung tried for a goal again but Cash blocked his kick. Before the close of the game Ames began to kick his long punts which McBride could not return and the ball was kept near Yale's goal. Ames tried for a goal from the field but failed. A fumble by Wurtemberg eight yards in front of Yale's goal enabled Cowan who was through Yale's line to fall on the ball and score another touchdown for Princeton. Ames failed to kick the goal. Just as time was called Ames made a good run of thirty yards to Yale's five-yard line. McBride saved another touchdown by tackling him and before the ball was put in play again, the great game ended.

Princeton had still further improved her play, from that of the previous year. She retained the essential features of the rushing game, but added a certain amount of open play directed against the ends, having learned that the rushing game alone was too hard on the men and gave scarcely any chance of brilliant individual plays. Now, for the first time, the interferers were expected to protect the runner, not only until he reached the line, but after he had passed it.

After the season was over, the championship team went to Washington to play a team of graduates.

The opening game of the season was interesting because of Franklin and Marshall's strength and Princeton's unmistakable weakness. But it is not wise to make too much of the opening game. Many unforeseen factors may arise. The heavy men on Franklin and Marshall, under the direction of a captain who had been thoroughly drilled in football tactics through a five year connection with Princeton teams, were not the football weaklings that so often meet Princeton in the opening of the season.

Princeton, o. Orange A. C., o.

No score was made in either half of the Orange game. Princeton bucked the centre most of the time, running Homans and Spicer around the ends now and then. The backs seemed to have little difficulty in making five yards in four downs, but time and again the ball was fumbled. Once Princeton advanced the ball to Orange's five yard line but was held.

The championship game on November 8, against the University of Pennsylvania, was full of disgraceful slugging by the home team. The umpire was unfit for duty. Every element of fair play was sacrificed to the desire to win. The strong point of Pennsylvania lay in their superior weight and repeated gains were made in massing their men and pushing. They broke through Princeton's line with the greatest of ease during the entire game and it was only by the hardest kind of work that Spicer, at the end of forty-three minutes made the first and only touchdown of the game. In the minute of play that remained, Pennsylvania rushed the ball down to Princeton's five yard line where Princeton braced and forced them back fifteen yards.

In the first half of the Wesleyan game the line work was weak but it played better in second half. The "V"-trick was used time and again for gains.

Wesleyan rushed the ball down field and for the first time in her history scored against Princeton. Acting Captain Furness talked to the team and Wesleyan scored no more. Princeton's play was fifty per cent. better in the second half, and it took very little exertion to roll up a final score of 46 to 4.

The game with Yale on November 27 was opened by Princeton with the "V"-formation, Poe at the apex. Homans kicked to McClung who was downed by Riggs on Yale's ten-yard line. Yale lost the ball and Homans tried for a goal from the field, but failed. Yale then began her wonderful aggressive game, hurling her massive rush line against Princeton's centre. Each time Princeton fought bravely, but she could not withstand the battering-ram assaults, and yard by yard Yale forced the ball down the field until the struggle was within Princeton's territory. Yale made great holes in the Princeton line repeatedly and followed them up with her backs. When on the defensive, Yale stopped the few end plays that Princeton attempted, and as Princeton persisted in bucking against Yale's invincible centre, the weakness of the Yale ends did not appear.

The ball was carried by Hartwell to Princeton's fifteen yard line, where Yale was held for two downs. Then McClung rushed through the line, dodged the backs and scored the first touchdown. After fifteen minutes more of play, McClung was given the ball on Princeton's twenty-five yard line, and ran around the end for a touchdown, so far in the corner of the field that the try-for-goal was a failure. Short rushes through Princeton's centre, ending in a fifteen yard run, through the line by McClung gave Yale another touchdown and goal. Then Princeton braced. King gained twelve yards on the "V"-formation and on the next rush, went through the Yale line for three yards. Spicer gained twenty yards, and short rushes by King and Spicer advanced the ball to Yale's thirty-yard line, where Homans made another unsuccessful attempt to kick a goal from the field.

In the second half, the Princeton team fought with all the fierceness and recklessness of despair, but it was a hopeless, helpless struggle. Princeton held Yale so well at first with Homan's punting, that it was thought by some that she could keep it up and prevent Yale from scoring again. Captain Poe saw that his backs could not make ground by rushing, so he worked them very little and passed the ball back for a kick whenever Princeton got it. Yale on the contrary, rushed the ball, getting it close to Princeton's goal twice and losing it on fumbles that prevented Yale from making another touchdown.

McClung caught a punt at centre, then Yale sent Heflefinger in for five yards; McClung around the right end for ten more; Rhodes around the left end for ten yards; S. Morrison through the centre for eight yards; Bliss for five; McClung for two; then McClung carried it to within a yard of Princeton's line, and finally Rhodes made the touchdown.

Princeton put the ball in play at centre and gaining no ground in an attempt to send King through the centre, Homans punted over the line, and Yale brought it out twenty-five yards. Yale adopted her steady rushes again, carrying the ball with small gains to Princeton's thirty-five yard line where B. Morrison punted into the crowd and Princeton got the ball out of bounds. Homans attempted to punt, but S. Morrison blocked it and Rhodes got the ball on Princeton's twenty yard line. Bliss went through the line for six yards and McClung around left end for a touchdown, from which he kicked a goal.

Yale's last touchdown was soon made by S. Morrison. Princeton started with the ball at the centre of the field, tried a wedge play, gained only four yards, and then punted. B. Morrison caught the ball on Yale's ten-yard line, McClung made a short gain, Rhodes gained ten yards around the left end, B. Morrison got four yards through the line. McClung ran fifteen yards around the left end, and then S. Morrison broke through the line, with Heflefinger behind him, and ran over seventy yards for the last touchdown. Heflefinger's interference was almost perfect.

Yale had played a winning game from the start. Her interference was better, she had greater effective strength, her blocking was better, her individual play was superior, her team play was more effective—she completely outclassed Princeton.

At this game a set of bleachers known as "patent portable stands" had been borrowed from the Philadelphia Baseball League and put up. Before the game, when the crowd was stamping to keep warm, the bleachers suddenly sagged forward, then collapsed. More than fifty people were seriously injured. This accident was one of the reasons why the management of the later games in New York was entrusted to the University Athletic Club, in order that their greater experience might save the spectators and the contestants from unnecessary danger and fraud.

The three years from 1888-1890 witnessed five great changes in the style of play: "1st—The perfecting and general use of the "V" trick and the consequent contracting of the line; 2nd—The sending of interferers ahead of a runner through the opening or around the end; 3rd—The bringing up of one of the halfbacks into the line when on the defensive, thus making the rush line number eight men; 4th—The bringing up of the halfbacks close to the line when on the offensive, thus doing away with long passes; 5th—the use of interference in protecting a runner from behind. Of these five important and essential changes Princeton introduced four and Yale the fifth."

At the close of the season of 1890, J. B. Riggs '92 had been elected captain, but he resigned early in the spring and R. H. Warren, '93, was chosen. An unusually large number of candidates appeared for practice, but there were of much promise.

No attempt was made in the practice games to pile up large scores, but the play was employed to train the men to buck the centre and for every man on the team to join in the interference.

In the game on November 7 against the University of Pennsylvania, Princeton forced the play and only once during the entire game did Pennsylvania get the ball within Princeton's thirty-five yard line, where it was immediately lost on four downs. Pennsylvania's aggressive play was weak, but the first half she played an almost faultless defensive game, tackled hard and succeeded in holding Princeton down to one touchdown. In the second half Princeton played a fast game and by long runs of Poe and Homans around the ends with an occasional gain through the centre, succeeded in scoring twenty points. Princeton's line was strong. Without exception the tackling was hard and sure and every attempt to buck the Princeton centre failed.

On November 14, Cornell played a strong aggressive game and prevented Princeton from scoring in the first half. Princeton's offensive play was much too uncertain and ragged, though relieved at times by brilliant runs and good interference. A lack of steadiness and systematic team play was everywhere apparent. The rough work of both rush lines was responsible for much of the individual play, which characterized the game. In the second half each side made many long runs and rushes; Cornell prevented Princeton Referee, Mr. Brooks, Harvard. Umpire, Mr. Coffin, Wesleyan.

Princeton, 0. Yale, 19.

1st Half (45 mins.) No Scoring.

2d Half (45 mins.) 1—Touchdown by McCormick; miss by McClung. 2—Touchdown by Winter. 3—Goal from 35 yd. line by McCormick. 4—Touchdown by Bliss; goal by McClung.

Yale won the game on November 26 by her superb team interference. The first half was filled by line plays and end runs of Yale, in many of which she was held long enough to yield the ball to Princeton, when Homans, by a long punt, regained the lost ground and prevented Yale from scoring. In the second half the Yale interference was irresistible, every man of the Yale team had his work mapped out for him in every play and if this sometimes made the ends hold and the interference freely use their hands, the result was only a long run and good advance. Princeton played pluckily. Early in the half McClung received the ball on Princeton's twenty-yard line and by a fine run carried it almost to the goal line. Then McCormick was pushed over. Homans kicked several times but Yale steadily advanced until Winter scored. McCormick then kicked a goal from the twenty-five yard line. A little later Homans tried for a goal from the field, but the ball went wild. The last score of the game was made by Bliss, who was given the ball on a criss-cross. He went cleanly through Princeton's line and with phenomenal interference ran sixty-five yards, shaking off King and Homans and scoring the third touchdown.

In the summer of 1892 Princeton endeavored to reinstate the Princeton-Harvard football contests, but the negotiations were abandoned because Harvard insisted that the game should be played on Thanksgiving Day, which, however, was reserved for the Princeton-Yale game.

In 1892, an attempt was made to encourage the class football contests which brought out and developed some promising men for the 'Varsity eleven. In October, C. C. Cuyler, '79, offered a handsome silver cup, "the Cuyler Football Class Cup," as a trophy for these matches, with the conditions that it should become the permanent property of the class winning it for three consecutive years, and that the men playing on the 'Varsity and Scrub elevens should not be eligible for their class teams. For five years the contests were held, but in 1897, they were abandoned because of lack of interest. The Cup is on exhibition in the Osborn House. In 1892, it was won by the Class of '93; in 1893, by the Class of '95; in 1894, by the Class of '95; in 1895, by the Class of '97; and in 1896, by the Class of '98.

The early games were rather unpromising except for individual play; especially the long runs of Poe and King. The first game in the championship series was won from Wesleyan by the score of 60—0.

In the first half of this game Princeton seemed unable to get through the line or around the ends, and little ground was gained by kicking for Gordon returned the ball by punts that equalled those of Homans. In the second half, the Princeton men played with better form. Twice, however, Wesleyan was within five yards of Princeton's goal but failed to score.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1--Touchdown by Camp; goal by Thayer; 15 mins.
2d Half (45 mins.) 2--Touchdown by King; miss by Homans.

On November 5 Pennsylvania defeated Princeton for the first time in her history. When the game began a high wind was blowing directly down the field, thus giving an immense advantage to whichever side won the toss. Pennsylvania won and the toss virtually decided the game. The wind carried Thayer's long kicks a tremendous distance, while Homans could not kick at all. Then the Pennsylvania team averaged eighteen pounds per man heavier than the Princeton eleven. As soon as Pennsylvania got the ball, its heavy rush line was hurled against Princeton's centre and a fatal weakness discovered at that point. Again and again did the Pennsylvania rushers make openings for their backs between Balliet and Fiscus. Finally Thayer punted but Pennsylvania soon regained the ball on downs. The steady forward rush of the Pennsylvania backs could not be checked. At the ten-yard line Pennsylvania lost but immediately regained the ball on fumbles. Then Camp, aided by the interference of Schoff, Thornton and Reese, made a touchdown. Thayer punted out to Vail and then kicked a goal.

When the ball was put in play again, by end runs Princeton advanced it to the Pennsylvania fifteen-yard line. Then there was an error of judgment and instead of continuing this successful play, an attempt was made to buck the line. On a fumble Pennsylvania secured the ball and the rest of the half was filled with punts in which Homans was inferior and fumbled greatly.

Eighteen minutes after play was called in the second half, Princeton had the ball on Pennsylvania's twenty-five yard line. The ball was passed to King and aided by fine interference of the entire Princeton team he went around left end for a touchdown, but Homans failed to kick a goal.

Princeton was now facing the wind and had the ball. For some time the ball passed from one side to the other, without material gain to either side. As defeat began to dawn upon them, Princeton grew desperate and battled fiercely for victory. Foot by foot they advanced the ball to Princeton's goal but every time the resistless sweep of the Red and Blue swept the ball up the field. King was forced to retire with an injured knee; Princeton now went down the field by five and ten-yard gains, but time was called before they scored again.

The Yale game was played on Thanksgiving day and was won by Yale.

The chief cause of the defeat was the condition of the team. In the early games the men had been battered and crippled in attempting to perfect momentum mass plays and by the end of the season they were in poor condition, and unable to carry out the intricate plays that they had practised.

Umpire, Mr. S. V. Coffin of Wesleyan.

Princeton, 0.      Yale, 12.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1--Touchdown by L. Bliss; goal by Butterworth; 3½ mins.
2nd Half (45 mins.) 2--Touchdown by Stillman; goal by Butterworth; 20 mins.

Yale opened the game with a wedge formation from which L. Bliss emerged to gain ten yards around left end. A right end play by Pop Bliss gained five yards. Yale's third play resulted in a touchdown. L. Bliss took the ball on a run, and with McCormick and Winter interfering, scored. Princeton put the ball in play with a wedge from which Morse gained fifteen yards. Then Homans punted to Yale's ten-yard line.

Yale advanced it to her twenty-five yard line but McCormick fumbled and Hall fell on the ball. Morse gained four yards around Greenway, and four more through Stillman. Poe got three more in the same place and Morse another past McCrea. Standing on the twenty-yard line Homans endeavored to kick a goal from the field but it went wide by a yard.

Yale started the play again with a wedge formation but was soon forced to punt. From Yale's forty-yard line Morse gained five yards through the centre. When Homans attempted to kick, Wallis and Greenway broke through, and he was downed with a loss of ten yards. Yale got the ball on four downs in the centre of the field. Princeton immediately recovered it on Yale's fifty-yard line, but fumbled. Butterworth punted out of bounds at Princeton's twenty-yard line. Homans punted twenty-five yards and Yale worked the ball down to Princeton's twenty-yard line by a series of rushes and a wedge, which Trenchard stopped beautifully by jumping over the heads of the rushers. When Princeton got the ball Homans punted to centre field. After Yale had worked the ball to the fifteen-yard line, Princeton got it for holding and Homans punted to centre field. Then Randolph tackled T. Bliss for a loss of ten yards.

The second half was opened by Princeton with a wedge, but after several advances, Homans punted weakly to Yale's thirty-yard line. C. Bliss rushed by Trenchard for fifteen yards, and T. Bliss made a fine run of twenty yards around Randolph's end. Princeton got the ball on her thirty-yard line and Homans punted to Yale's forty-five yard line. Then Princeton got the ball for holding on the line at her forty-yard line. Homans punted but Stillman breaking through, blocked the kick and catching it on a bound, made the second touchdown. After a series of rushes Homans punted to the ten-yard line and Butterworth returned to Poe on the forty-five yard line who made a run of twenty yards. Then King made five yards around the end. Princeton attempted to rush the centre but lost the ball to Yale on the fourth down. Butterworth made a poor punt and Poe secured the ball on Yale's twenty-yard line. Homans tried a goal from the field. The ball went straight but he had not allowed enough for the wind and it was blown just one foot outside the posts. The ball was rushed down to Princeton's ten-yard line where it went to Princeton for holding in the line. But for offside play it was given to Yale. Wheeler blocked McCormick's attempt for goal from field, but Hinkey got it and made twenty yards around left end, being downed on the five-yard line. C. Bliss gained a yard through centre and Graves in an attempt to go around the right end, raced away across the field without gaining a yard. Princeton held wonderfully and received the ball on downs; and she advanced it to her fifteen-yard line before time was called.

In the fall of 1893, the following rules of eligibility were adopted by the Intercollegiate Association and as a result, the University of Pennsylvania resigned:

"No man shall be eligible for the team of any college in the Association, who is not pursuing a bona fide course requiring attendance on recitations or lectures of at least six hours a week. If a graduate, he shall be pursuing a course for a degree requiring at least one year's study. If an undergraduate and not pursuing for a degree, he shall not be allowed to play during his first year in college.

"Any man who has attended lectures or recitations in any other college shall not be eligible for the team of any college in this Association unless he be a regular member of the freshman, academic, or scientific class, or until he has spent one year of resident study in that college, and has passed satisfactory examinations upon a year's work.

"No man shall play more than four years on any team in this Association.

"Two weeks before each game of this Association the two captains shall submit to each other a list of forty players from which his team shall be chosen. If either captain has any objections to make to any man on the list submitted to him he shall submit the protest within four days to the Advisory Committee and to the other captain. The Advisory Committee shall have power to decide on the eligibility of players, and shall consider the protests submitted to them within forty-eight hours of their receipt. Either captain may submit a further list of six players not later than five days before the game. Protests to any of these men may be submitted in the same manner, and the Advisory Committee shall pass upon the same not later than forty-eight hours before the game.

"The referee of any game of this Association, at the request of either captain, shall debar from that game any man not included in the lists submitted, or who has been declared ineligible by the Advisory Committee."

The defeat of the eleven of 1892 had been due to lack of team play and overwork in the early games. This fault was carefully guarded against by the coaches of 1893 and as a result of their training, the team of 1893 played as a unit and won the championship. There was no attempt to develop trick plays; good straight football was preferred, in which every man had his part to play and played it. The style of play was suited to the men; they were not asked to attempt any intricate formations. More attention was paid to their physical condition; they were all required to sleep at the clubhouse, while their food supply was carefully examined. Yet little judgment was shown in each man's diet; the small quarterback received the same quantity of food as the big guard.

Princeton, 4. University of Pennsylvania, 0.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Ward; miss by King; 14 mins.

On November 4 Princeton defeated the University of Pennsylvania, 4—0, in a game devoid of any remarkable features and characterized by a lack of brilliant plays on both sides. Pennsylvania excelled Princeton in weight, and although the sappy condition of the ground favored its style of game, which abounded in mass plays, Princeton showed up so strongly in the line that attempts to buck the centre were generally unsuccessful and usually resulted in the loss of the ball on four downs. Princeton's game, while faster and depending more on interference, was greatly handicapped by the wet, and its principal gains were made through openings in the line; though there was an abundance of punting on both sides. The "muckerish" playing of Pennsylvania cannot be too strongly condemned. Their main object seemed to be to slug and "knee" on every opportunity and on one occasion when the ball went out of bounds even the substitutes took a hand. Under the extreme provocations it is very creditable that Princeton played such a clean game. The one score was made in the first half. Wheeler blocked Knipe's kick on Pennsylvania's twenty-yard line and Trenchard fell on the ball on the four-yard line. Ward gained two yards through centre and on the next down went through Taylor's opening for a touchdown.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Ward; goal by King; 35 mins.

2d Half (45 mins.) No scoring.

Princeton won the championship from Yale on Thanksgiving Day by the strongest team that Princeton had ever put into the field, both physically and scientifically. Each man played with confidence, played his game and outplayed his opponent. The spirit and dash of the team work were special factors in the result, and the style of play as adopted by the Princeton backs had already been styled the "Princeton tandem," just as the old initial wedge had been termed the Princeton "V." The game was played simply on the merits of both teams, there being no disastrous elements in the way of wind or rain to favor either side.

It was the greatest contest from first to last ever played on an American field—great in the physical strength and endurance of the twenty-two men, for it is safe to say that an hour and a half of harder football was never played; greater in their skill, but greatest in showing to the 40,000 spectators that filled every available square foot of space within the Manhattan Field enclosure and overflowed on the surrounding hills and other points of observation, that a game of football can be played without slugging. Only once was the umpire called upon to warn a player. It was a decided triumph for the Princeton coaches, since it had been said at different times and by different authorities that they had not kept pace with the game down at Princeton. The team they turned out this year, however, proved that not only had they kept pace with the ultra game, with the flying wedge and kindred plays, but had brought their eleven up to a degree of perfection in good straight football, with its interference and team play, that has never been excelled, and equalled by only one or two of Yale's star elevens.

The victory can be traced to the great strength of the rush line, in both offensive and defensive play, the well developed system of interference, the ground gaining and tackling abilities of the backs, and the unflinching certainty with which the whole team picked out the man with the ball. Yale did not play with her accustomed snap and the backs started slowly, giving the Princeton line plenty of time to break through and stop the runner before the interference was under way. The flying mass plays of Yale made but little headway and time and again the ball was lost on downs. Princeton had little difficulty in circling the Yale ends, though Greenway showed up a trifle stronger than Hinkey. The chief points of attack were the tackles and here steady games were made. The remarkable feature of the touchdown was the steady advancement of the ball by these mass plays on the tackles, interspersed with the new flying wedge plays, for continuous gains of from one to five yards, beginning at the centre of the field and ending in a touchdown, without once losing possession of the ball. Both sides were repeatedly penalized for off-side play. Although the play was mostly in Yale's territory, the game was desperately contested.

Princeton began the game with the flying wedge, by which King gained twenty yards. The ball was fumbled and immediately Yale began that magnificent defense which lasted throughout the game. The game was later advanced to Yale's three-yard line but Thorne punted on the third down. Yale gained a good deal on a fake mass play which resulted in a kick. After a series of fifteen-yard rushes and some shorter gains, Ward was pushed over Yale's goal for a touchdown. Yale opened play with the flying wedge and again at the second half. The ball was forced to Yale's five-yard line, but Yale held well. On the first down Butterworth made the longest punt of the game, going over the heads of Princeton's backs, but King secured it on the fifty-yard line. Princeton carried the ball to Yale's ten-yard line where Blake failed in his attempt to kick a difficult goal from the field. After the kick-off King rushed the ball back twenty-five yards, and other gains placed it on Yale's five-yard line but Princeton could not force it over. The game was called with the ball on Yale's fifteen yard line.

At the time of the game the following article by Richard Harding Davis appeared in Harper's Weekly, from which it is printed by permission:

THE THANKSGIVING-DAY GAME.

(Copyright 1893, by Harper & Brothers.)

There is nothing more curious or more interesting in the history of New York City within the last decade than the development of the Thanksgiving-day game. Ten years ago the game was a sporting event, and nothing more, of interest to but a few thousand faithful ones, and to others a public and private nuisance, because for them it disturbed the peace of Broadway at night, and left a vacant chair at the dinner table of every family in which there was a boy worthy the name. To-day the sporting character of the event has been overwhelmed by the social interest it has aroused in itself, and which has enveloped it and made it more of a spectacle than an athletic contest. But it is still the greatest sporting event and spectacle combined that this country has to show. It is one of the things every foreigner should be taken to see, and which no foreigner could possibly appreciate. No one who does not live in New York can understand how completely it colors and lays its hold upon that city, how it upsets and overturns its thoroughfares, and disturbs its rapid routine of existence, and very few even of those who do live in New York can explain just why this is so; they can only accept the fact.

And they accept it gladly. The enthusiasm of the few faithful ones of ten years back is mocked at and set at naught today by the thousands who do not know a touchdown from a three-base hit, or whether Yale is a city, State or club, or its eleven a traveling combination of ex-pugilists. They are only certain that two teams of young men are going to fight it out in Harlem, and that "the Yales" are blue, and "the Princetonians" are generally referred to as "tigers," which fact makes them the choice among the voters of the east side.

Ten years ago Thanksgiving day in New York was an event of moment and of meaning; there still clung to it the semi-religious significance that gave it its place in the calendar, and it was as heinous an offence to be absent from the dinner table on that day, as to substitute duck for turkey at that meal. But the game up at the polo grounds caused many desertions and annual mutinies; and the family idea which was first lessened by the absence from the table of one was further spoiled when the head of the family followed his son, and then the uncles and poor relations, and at last the daughters and mothers, learned to prefer the nipping winds and tingling feet of the polo grounds to the heavy dinner in the middle of the day at home. It was not that they cared so much for football pure and simple, but that the day was a holiday, and that there was nothing better offered, and that they could see the other people and could be seen by them, and it, in short, became "the thing to do," and the significance of that day which once centered in New England around a grateful family offering thanks for blessings received and a fruitful harvest now centres in Harlem about twenty-two very dirty and very earnest young men who are trying to force a leather ball over a whitewashed line.

Ten years ago a solitary "haberdasher," as he delights to call himself, used to decorate his windows before Thanksgiving day with orange and black and blue handkerchiefs, and those of us who were in college then considered this as a rare piece of condescension on his part, and as a sign that the public, as represented by this solitary shopkeeper, was interested in the struggle of the college boys up on the polo grounds. To-day—But this is not the place to tell how it is to-day; this part tells how it used to be. It used to be that there two games—one in the morning, between Pennsylvania and Wesleyan, and the great game in the afternoon—and all "true sports" went out early to see both, and remained on the damp muddy grounds until late in the afternoon. The first game was not scientific, but was desperate, and served to whet one's appetite for the game to come. At this, 8000 people formed what was considered in those days a magnificent audience—an audience in which the young men outnumbered the young women fifty to one, and the members of which strayed over the field and lost themselves on the big grand stand, and spent the greater part of their energy in shouting "Get off the field!" at the two or three hundred politicians, newspaper men, actors and attachés of the polo grounds, who walked complacently around the lines. It was only necessary in those days to take a few sheets of writing-paper with you, and to say that you were a reporter, to get a place inside the ropes. There was no system worthy the name, and no order.

The real reporters, with very few exceptions, never saw a football match from one year's end to another except this particular one, and so gave only descriptive accounts of the game, in which they spoke humorously of the splints and bandages and ambulances, and gallantly of the girls with "eyes of Yale blue" and those who "wore Harvard crimson in their cheeks." And the fact that a Tammany politician had attended the game in a white greatcoat was of much more important news interest to them than that either side had scored. In those days a man who drove out to the game in a cab, instead of taking the elevated, was considered a profligate, and there were seldom more than twenty of these to be seen on the field, seated on the driver's box, and waving a large flask and a small flag. I do not know why it should have been so, but even the clerk of the weather disregarded the college men entirely in those days, and never took the trouble to see that they had any accompaniment for their game other than a drizzling rain, with gusts and flurries of snow, and a bleak wind. He knows better than that now.

After the game in those early days all the students massed themselves in Koster & Bial's, which was then at Twenty-third Street, and packed it so full that after nine o'clock a man who wished to leave it had to be passed out over the heads of the crowd; and this the crowd would do for him with a cheerful alacrity that landed him hatless and breathless in the lobby, with the impression that he had been caught up by the sails of a windmill and hurled into space.

It was a curious sight. The hall was very small, very dirty, badly lit, and with a low ceiling, against which the smoke rolled and clung like waves on a shore. Below this, and on the single balcony that ran like a horseshoe around the building, were more men than the floor could hold, and who overflowed upon each other's shoulders, and stepped from table to table, or dropped from the boxes to the heads of the men below. These were all very young men, in what were known in those days as Newmarket coats and high curly-brimmed hats, and with silk kerchiefs bound around their necks inside the collar of these green great-coats. The silk kerchief was one of the fashions of that day, and it gave the unknowing ones the impression that every well-dressed young man of New York was suffering from a severe cold. These young men, whose garb made them look like an army of coachmen, hung three deep over the railings of the boxes, blocked the aisles, balanced themselves and embraced each other on the tops of the tables, and stepped forth from these unsteadily on to the heads of the crowd without exciting any ill-humor on the part of the gentlemen so trampled upon. They yelled the entire time, and gave the particular college of every known institution of learning, and at moments of greatest enthusiasm clambered upon the stage, and were pitched off into the arms of their companions and on to the heads of the frightened orchestra by the irate German managers.

There was an attempt at a performance going on meanwhile, but no one noticed it, and on one night I remember the audience of over a thousand students sang the chorus of one song throughout the entire evening in a monotonous roar that turned the performance on the stage into a pantomime. The actors came on and went off, embraced or fought or sang or danced as their part on the programme suggested, but it was as silent a performance as that of the L'Enfant Prodigue. One could see the leader wave his baton, and the actresses open their lips, and the comedians fall down and get up again, but all one could hear was the audience shouting, cheerfully,

"They're a.—ter me,
They're af.—ter me,
For I'm the individual they require."

They were singing it when I left, and with such evident self-satisfaction that if it were not that Koster's has moved I would not be sure that they were not sitting there yet and singing still.

Now all this is changed, and the city surrenders herself to the students and their game as she never welcomes any other event, except a Presidential election, which only happens once every four years, or a Columbian celebration, which has occurred but once in four hundred. She begins to prepare for them early in November, and shops in which there is nothing the student could possibly wish to buy fill their bow-windows, in spite of that fact, with the colors of the two rivals, and from Ninety-fourth Street in Harlem to lower Broadway, where the battle of business is thickest, and from the east side to the North River, the same colors in every form and texture hang on the outer walls, and the cry is that "they come." But long before they come, every other young woman you meet, and every little boy, and elderly men even, begin to parade Broadway with bows of blue stuck on their persons, or long strips of orange and black ribbon, like those of the floor committee at an east-side ball, which proclaim their allegiance and their hopes. It is not at all probable that the brothers of all these young women have ever enjoyed the benefits of a collegiate education—if they have they should certainly take better care of their sisters—or that the little boys ever expect to "follow the ball," but they like to feel that they are in whatever is going on, and though they have the vaguest ideas of what it is about, they are nevertheless proud of their colors, and that they are championing something. There are two or three facts which tend to show how the development of the Thanksgiving-day game has affected those in high places. One of these is that service in many of the churches of this city were held one hour earlier than usual last Thanksgiving day, because the rectors found they could not get full congregation unless the service was over in time to allow the worshippers to make an early start for Manhattan Field. And another is that the manager of the Yale team wrote the secretary of the President of the United States to inquire if he could not get prompt information as to just what day the President intended to proclaim as the day of general thanksgiving. Whether he received this information promptly I do not know; but they tell in Boston how that other fine Democrat, the Governor of Massachusetts, wrote to the Harvard team to ask when it would best please that august body to have Thanksgiving day in that commonwealth. These facts are interesting as showing that Church and State both recognize the national importance of the Thanksgiving-day game.

Three days before the eventful day, fakirs from Nassau and Ann streets swarm up town like an invading army, or like two invading armies, with banners and flags and artificial flowers in the true colors, and with tiny leather footballs and buttons and rosettes and ribbons and tin horns and countless varieties of badges. They give the streets as much color as the flowers give life to the Paris boulevards, and the city is en fête and divided into rival camps. Photographs of the players show in every shop window; and their pictures appear and reappear with each edition of the daily papers. The legitimate gambling on the floor of the Stock Exchange is neglected for the greater interest of betting on the game, and the odds given and taken are quoted in the papers as regularly as the rise and fall of a railroad stock. Seats for the game sell at fifteen dollars apiece, and boxes at a hundred and fifty, and the men who took the few solitary cabs to the polo grounds ten years ago have now to engage a coach one year in advance, and pay twenty dollars to reserve a place for it.

The collegians begin to arrive in town on Wednesday, and one sees nothing but young men enveloped in huge great-coats and ulsters, with yellow shoes, and canes wrapped in ribbons. They make Broadway between the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where the Yale team lodge, and the Hoffman House, where odds are given and taken on the game, almost impassable. In the corridors of these two hotels men who graduated in the seventies are sure to meet men who graduated with them, and they gather here from all over the United States, from Texas and Oregon, with that disregard for distance that the Western man soon learns, to talk football, and to wager large sums of money with utter strangers, who agree with them readily enough to leave sums of two and three thousand dollars in the hands of a man who is also a stranger to both of them. This man is "Billy" Edwards, an ex-prize-fighter, who keeps guard over the glass-ware of the Hoffman House bar, and who has become a most important figure in this great sporting event. He is the depository of almost all bets, and gives nothing in return for the bundles of bills left in his charge but a piece of paper, and yet so great is the confidence in him and in his integrity that he goes to sleep on the eve of Thanksgiving day with as much as $50,000 in his possession, belonging to men he had seen but a few hours before, and the faces of whom he has quite forgotten.

Everything on four wheels and that will hold twenty men on its top in the city of New York goes up Fifth Avenue on Thursday morning. It is like a circus procession many miles long. It begins at ten in the morning, four hours before the game, when the coaches meet in front of the Fifth Avenue and the Brunswick hotels, where a crowd has gathered to cheer them as they start. The streets are empty, for it is a holiday, and the sounds of the bugle calls and coach horns and the rifle-like cheer of Yale and the hissing sky-rocket yell of Princeton break in on the Sabbath-like quiet of the streets like the advance of an army going forth triumphantly to war. There is everything, from the newest English brake to omnibuses, draped from their tops to the level of the street with cloths of yellow and blue, hung in festoons or dropped in four straight curtains from each corner and dragging in the mud, and with wheels covered up entirely or decorated with ribbons around their spokes, and suggesting monster revolving pin-wheels. Some of the brakes have six horses, none less than four, all blanketed in the true colors, and every coach carries twenty shouting men and excited young women smothered in furs; and the flags, as they jerk them about, fill the air with color; and the coaches themselves toss like ships in a heavy sea, rocking from side to side, and sinking and rebounding on their springs as the men on top jump up and down in time to the rhythm of the rival cheers.

Every coach-load yells for all the pretty girls on the next coach if they wear the proper colors, and race scornfully past those who do not; and from the Washington Arch to the layers of flats in Harlem there are holiday-makers out along the route to see the procession pass, standing in some places three and four deep along the sidewalk. And from houses all along the course there are bits of bunting and big flags; sometimes it is only a strip of paper-muslin fluttering from the eighth-story window of a cheap apartment house, and again it is a big silken banner swinging from the house front of some important friend of one or the other of the two colleges, who has built a dormitory or given a son to the football team. And as the decorated horses and bedecked hansom and brakes and coaches and omnibuses go galloping up the avenue there are special cheers for the orange flag and the big black P in front of the Sloanes and the Alexanders and the Scribners, and for the blue banners and white Y before the homes of the Whitneys and the Vanderbilts.

Manhattan Field, where the game has been held of late years, and where it took place last week, looks to the spectator as if it were laid out on the top of a table-land, with the grand-stands built up around its edges. In almost all other athletic grounds in this country you can see, above the sky-line of the stands, the roofs of the houses and the tops of trees beyond; but in Manhattan Field it is as though you were in a big bucket, with green turf at the bottom and grand-stands for sides. At one end back of the stands there is a steep hill, with a face of bare rock; and this and the Washington Viaduct, which stretches high in air beyond the south side of the field, are the only objects one can see from the ground that are not part and parcel of the immense stands towering on every side. It is exactly as though you were in a pit or in the mouth of a monster crater lined to its edges with human beings. Last week these human beings numbered thirty thousand. They were ranged around the whitewashed gridiron, and separated from it by a stout board fence four feet high. Inside of this fence were the reporters and telegraph operators, and the coaches and substitutes lying on the ground or crouched out of sight against the board fence.

Back of the fence, boxes stretched around one-fourth of its circumference, and behind the rest of its extent people stood in a solid mass until they reached the grand-stands, where they rose skywards as closely packed together as fir-trees on a mountain side. But just as human beings are much more interesting than fir-trees, so this portrait gallery of faces was more impressive than a forest of pines. It was as if all the faces of the portrait gallery had been cut out of their canvases and pasted together on a wall a quarter of a mile in circumference and fifty yards high, and at places much higher; for those on Dead-head Hill and on the Washington Viaduct were so far above the heads of those on the ground that it was impossible to distinguish them except with an opera-glass. When every other one of these forty thousand human beings stood up and yelled and waved a blue or an orange and black flag, the effect was worth crossing an ocean to see. There are certain traditions of these games which are interesting, and which were observed last week with much enthusiasm. One of these is the singing of words expressive of the sentiments of the rival colleges to the tunes of hymns and popular songs; in which the names of the "star" players are handed down to immortality, as were the heroes of the ancient Goths in their war-songs.

It is also interesting to the stranger to note how systematically the cheering is given, how it is timed to destroy the effect of the rival cheering, and that certain men are selected to lead and give the time for these yells, who hold a position similar to that of a leader of an orchestra. This year there was a new and an unintentionally pretty effect in the introduction of blankets by the substitutes, in the place of "sweaters." They found that it took too long to pull a jersey on and off a player while he was waiting for a comrade to revive, or for the two captains to discuss a disputed point with the referee, and that throwing a blanket around him kept him warmer. So this year the substitutes lay around the lines, stretched at full length on blankets of double length, and whenever time was called, as it was at almost every fifth minute of each half, they would swarm over the field, waving their blankets like matadors in a bull fight, and smother the eleven men of their college, transforming them in an instant into a dancing group of blanketed Indians.

There is no change so noticeable in the Thanksgiving day game as the difference in the manner in which it is reported for the daily papers. It is no longer considered enough to cover it with two men—one to write the introduction, and the other to describe the play. Now each paper sends its star men, its artists, and photographers, and engages many ex-players of reputation to describe the game from the points of view of adherents of each college, and to make diagrams which show where the ball was at every minute of the two halves and to denote who advanced it and who stopped it. At the last Thanksgiving-day game that I helped to report for the Evening Sun, there were seventeen men assisting one another in covering it for that paper, and every one helped, from the proud reporter who came out on a coach and sent us word by a policeman that Chauncey M. Depew had just arrived, to the new reporter, who raced five blocks after an ambulance to get the name of the wounded players whom he supposed to be inside, and which he finally found, on overtaking it, to be empty.

This last game was perhaps the very best, as a sporting event and as a spectacle, that New York has ever seen.

The weather was perfect weather, and the football was perfect football. It was particularly interesting to old players, as Walter Camp has already pointed out in the New York Herald, an account of the revival, and the most successful revival, of the double pass and the long pass, which plays had been given up of late for the wedge. No one, on matter how hardened he may be to the roughness of football, can look at a wedge forming without a shudder of apprehension and disgust, and no one who saw "Bobby" Baker's old trick of the long pass so beautifully executed last week but felt that the open game is the cleaner and safer and better one.

In enthusiasm I do believe I have never seen a more remarkable game than this last, and as an exhibition of delight there was never anything so complete and satisfying as an illustration of that feeling than was the sight of the Princeton substitutes, with their chins in their hands, and their elbows in the mud, and the rest of their bodies balanced in air, kicking and trembling with ecstasy. Nor was there ever a more excellent example of Yale grit than that showed by the eleven within three minutes of the last half, when they prevented Princeton from scoring a second time, though the ball was within a few feet of the goal-line.

People who live far away from New York, and who cannot understand from the faint echoes they receive how great is the enthusiasm that this contest arouses, may possibly get some idea of what it means to the contestants themselves through the story of a remarkable incident which occurred after the game in the Princeton dressing-room. The team were being rubbed down for the last time after their three months of self-denial, and anxiety, and the hardest and roughest sort of rough work that young men are called upon to do, and outside in the semi-darkness thousands of Princeton followers were jumping up and down, and hugging each other, and shrieking themselves hoarse.

One of the Princeton coaches came into the room out of this mob, and holding up his arm for silence, said, "Boy; I want you to sing the doxology." And standing as they were naked and covered with mud and blood and perspiration, the eleven men who had won the championship sang the doxology from the beginning to the end as solemnly and as seriously, and, I am sure, as sincerely, as they ever did in their lives, while outside the no less thankful fellow-students yelled and cheered, and beat at the doors and windows, and howled for them to come out and show themselves. This may strike some people as a very sacrilegious performance, and as a most improper one, but the spirit in which it was done has a great deal to do with the question, and any one who has seen a defeated team lying on the benches of their dressing-room, sobbing like hysterical school-girls, can understand how great and how serious is the joy of victory to the men who conquer.

Listless playing on Princeton's part resulted in the small score of the Cornell game. The first touchdown was made after two runs by Brown, who brought the ball from the forty-five to the three-yard line, and Barnett carried it over. Long runs by Beacham and Starbuck resulted in one touchdown for Cornell. In the second half Wheeler blocked a kick and McCormick fell on the ball.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Williams; goal by Brooke; 15 mins. 2—Touchdown by Osgood; goal by Brooke; 25 mins.

On November 10, Princeton was defeated by the University of Pennsylvania. The defeat was due to the miserable physical condition of the Princeton team who were suffering from tannic poisoning and an injudicious training; and to the style of mass play that Pennsylvania used.

In making the play the tackles and ends moved to the support of centre in order to do the holding and the line was narrowed to five men. The two guards with either one of the half backs formed a triple tandem at one side of the line, the other half back and the full back standing on the other side. Under the new rules, three men were allowed to start forward at full speed, the ball was passed to the chosen runner and the play was consummated.

In the first half Princeton tried hard to gain ground, but the Pennsylvania line was like a stone wall and the only way in which Princeton could get the ball into Pennsylvania territory was by punting, and then it was there for but a few minutes before it had been rushed back with an impetus which was irresistible. Once Pennsylvania got the ball on Princeton's ten-yard line, only to lose it on a foul, when it looked as if a touchdown would be made. It was quickly punted out of danger by Cochran and then on some more hard rushes, Pennsylvania was again at the ten-yard line. Then the ball was worked along to the one-yard line and it seemed a foregone conclusion that a touchdown would be made. It was the third down with but one yard to go and Pennsylvania made a vicious onslaught, but could get only six inches, and Princeton had the ball that distance from her goal line. Cochran then promptly punted it out of danger. The ball was worked back toward the middle of the field and Poe for Princeton, made the longest run of the game—twenty yards around the right end—and in a few minutes time was called. In this half Princeton's interference was better than Pennsylvania's but Princeton's line was weak.

In the second half every Pennsylvania man was in every play and Pennsylvania scored twice. The ball had been worked down toward the Princeton line by easy stages, and Princeton had it on the thirty-five yard line. Cochran attempted to punt it to the middle of the field when Woodruff got through, blocked the kick, and before any of the Princeton men could recover from their surprise, Williams had the ball and was sprinting toward the goal line with the Princeton men in full chase. They prevented him from running behind the goal posts, but that was all they could do, and he got a touchdown in such a good position that Brooke kicked the goal without trouble.

After about twelve minutes' play the ball was carried to within nine yards of Princeton's line, when, by one of the oldest tricks, Pennsylvania got another touchdown. The ball was snapped back to Kuibe, who took a step forward and then passed the ball to Osgood, who got through the line without any trouble and then ran around behind the goal posts, while the Princeton players were standing looking at him twenty feet away. It was a simple double pass that is as old as the game. After that Pennsylvania played on the defensive and punted whenever they got the ball, so that it was in Princeton's territory all of the time. Probably not five minutes of the whole game saw the ball on Pennsylvania's territory, which showed very plainly how badly the orange and black was outplayed.

This was the last game in which Princeton played the University of Pennsylvania, for the Faculty Committee deemed it advisable to discontinue the contests, on account of the intense feeling of rivalry between the institutions, which would lead to undue roughness and engender more bitter feeling.

Yale won the game on November 21 by the large score 24—0. Yale won the toss and took the western end of the field. Princeton having the ball, Wheeler kicked to Jerrems on the thirty-yard line, who rushed it back to centre field before Trenchard forced him out of bounds. Jerrems failed to gain through Wheeler, and Butterworth punted to Poe on Princeton's twenty-five yard line. The signal was given for Cochran to punt but Hickok broke through the defence and blocked the kick and Murphy fell on it on Princeton's five-yard line. Butterworth gained two yards through the centre and on the next play made a touchdown. Wheeler kicked off to Butterworth on the fifteen-yard line, who made twenty yards around Trenchard's end. Then Butterworth punted to Princeton's twenty-five yard line to Poe who advanced the ball six yards through Beard, but on the next play Murphy tackled Rosengarten so fiercely that Princeton lost two yards. Bannard punted to Butterworth in the centre of the field and the latter was downed in his tracks by Brown. A fumble by Adee caused a loss of three yards and Butterworth kicked swiftly to Princeton's five-yard line, where Bannard fell on the ball, after a hard run. Then Bannard received instructions to kick the ball out of danger but his attempt was so poor that he had advanced it only five yards but Trenchard fell on it. Another punt by Bannard was more successful, for Butterworth was forced outside at Princeton's forty-yard line by Holly. Then Jerrems made two yards between Brown and Holly. Butterworth also got a yard at left tackle but on Thorne's fumble Princeton received five yards for interference by Murphy. Then Rosengarten fumbled for a loss of three. Poe was pushed between Hickok and Stillman for five yards and then Princeton began to put the new system of interference into play. "Every player but the centre rush was pulled back of the line, and two men from the right or left side of this line invariably ran across the Yale's right or left tackles before the ball was snapped back. By this a sort of flying interference was formed, and the man with the ball was pushed after the two leaders by the other members of the team. But Yale broke up this novel arrangement by allowing the interferers full headway, and then tackling the man with the ball. When a Princeton back took the ball under ordinary circumstances he was not helped along by interference for any material gain, for the Yale ends and tackle broke through with great force and downed the runner almost in his tracks." However not much was gained at this time for the ball went to Yale on Rosengarten's fumble. Thorne went through Holly for three yards, Jerrems through centre for another yard and Beard bucked Wheeler for four. Butterworth circled with good interference around Trenchard for ten yards. Beard got two past Wheeler; Thorne plunged wildly between Wheeler and Holly for six; and Butterworth landed the ball on Princeton's five-yard line by trying the same place. Beard made another yard through centre. Nothing on earth could stop such fierce rushes, and the Tigers were retreating slowly toward their goal line. Butterworth bucked the centre twice and made another touchdown. The Princeton men played a dogged determined game after this, but there was no head used in many of the critical moments and the players did not put the spirit into their work which made them take chances, which if successful might have done much to hold the score down, if it could not have given them some points to their own credit. After the second touchdown Princeton tried manfully to make a strong pace, but neither the defence or offence was to be compared with Yale's. Princeton's interference was neither well planned nor well executed and her playing of the flying interference by three men was not so good as Yale's. The whole team, with the exception of the centre, were back about five or seven yards. The three men then started across in front of the quarter, who was fully five yards from his centre rush, and just after they had passed, the centre forced the ball back to the quarter from between his legs, bending over far enough to get his direction by looking out between his legs. Then the rest of the team came in after the playing interference. The placing the quarter so far from the centre was a new play and though it was not unsuccessful, it seemed to be somewhat unnecessary, since two passes were still required and the only change were that they were both moderately long, instead of being one long and one short. The same formation was used in kicks. The full back stood back at least fifteen yards and often further and yet he did not then seem to have sufficient time for his kicks.

It was not long before the superior work of Yale's backs had again carried the ball into Princeton's territory and by hard, short and oft repeated plays, Butterworth, Thorne, Jerrems and Beard carried the ball again over the line and Hickok again kicked a goal, making the score 18—0. This effectually destroyed all hope of Princeton winning and nothing now remained but to play a manly game and score once if possible. Still as time was called Yale was again on the point of scoring and the whistle blew with the play about to start from Princeton's three yard line.

In the second half, both teams weakened. Yale, because she was not in a condition to play two such halves as the first had been after her hard game with Harvard, and Princeton, because the men had to acknowledge that this year they were not in the same class with Yale. There was consequently bad play on both sides, an unnatural amount of fumbling by the Princeton backs and no spirit in Yale's play. Only one touchdown was scored by Yale, and that was not earned, for Jerrems made it by catching the ball after Rosengarten had muffed it from Butterworth's kick on his own ten yard line. It was a sad exhibition of football that Rosengarten and Poe gave in trying to hold the water soaked ball, for Butterworth sent low punts, which are hard to catch in any case, while Bannard's punts were high and the Yale backs caught them well. The play in the entire half was near the middle of the field, neither side seeming able to put enough life into the game to force the ball down in one direction or the other, and after the fourth touchdown the Yale men did not have the impetus to go on running up a score.

The defeat was due primarily to the physical condition of the Princeton men, all of whom ought to have been in the Infirmary.

Early in the season of 1894, in order to encourage punting, the alumni of New York offered two prize cups, valued at $60 and $40, for the first and second best average in punting and drop kicking. Members of any class except the senior class might compete. Each contestant had six punts and eighteen drop kicks. In punting, every yard over thirty yards was counted one point and every yard under thirty took one point from his score. Each contestant had six drop kicks from each of twenty-five, thirty and thirty-five yard lines. On each line the contestant had two kicks from the middle of the line and two from points fifteen yards to the right or left of middle.

The cups were awarded to E. M. Hunt, '95, with the average of 82.53; and to Sawyer, '07, with the average 79.74.

2d Half. 2—Touchdown by Fulton; goal by Pope. 3—Touchdown by Riggs; no goal by Brokaw.

The entire second half of the Lafayette game was played in the rain and the ball was slippery, but the small score was due less to the wet day than to the strong defense play of Lafayette. On the other hand, the ball was never nearer to Princeton's goal than the thirty-five yard line and Lafayette could only gain by kicking. Princeton played a bucking game throughout, only kicking three times.

2d Half. 5—Touchdown by Fulton; goal by Lea.

The Orange game was a stubborn, though short contest. Princeton played a strong defensive game and the ball was never within forty yards of their goal. If Princeton had not made two unsuccessful attempts to kick goals from the thirty yard line, they might have scored by rushing; for just before the game ended, they carried the ball to within six inches of the Orange goal line.

Early in the season Princeton accepted Harvard's challenge to play for two years, the first game at Princeton, the second at Cambridge. There were two sets of rules for 1895, one used by Princeton and Yale, and the other by Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania. But as both Princeton and Harvard were anxious to play, a compromise was speedily arranged: by which six men were allowed behind the line in accordance with the Harvard rules, but no one was allowed to start before the ball was put in play.

2d Half. 1—Touchdown by Rosengarten; no goal by Suter. 2—Touchdown by Shaw. 3—Touchdown by Rosengarten; no goal by Suter. 4—Touchdown by Suter; no goal by Suter.

Harvard had the advantage of position at the start with the wind at their backs. Neither side scored in the first half and while Harvard kept the ball well into Princeton's territory most of the time, Princeton's defensive work was so strong that Harvard could not get near the goal line. Harvard's line stood up well enough in the early part of the battle, but in the second half it crumbled like a picket fence before the determined, well timed rush of the Tigers. The most striking incident of the first half was Suter's run. In an effort to make a double pass Fairchild fumbled the ball, and Suter darted through the Harvard line like a flash and grabbing the ball, scooted down the field with the speed of the wind. He seemed to have a certain touchdown, for every man on the field was some distance behind him, when his foot slipped in the wet grass twenty yards from the Harvard line and C. Brewer barely caught his ankle. As it was, Suter's run was good for fully ninety yards. From the ten yard line Princeton massed her forces and tried to break through Harvard's line. She could not do it and the ball went to Harvard on downs. Harvard advanced it to Princeton's five yard line; Lea blocked a kick and secured the ball in midfield.

In the second half a bad fumble by Borden brought the ball close to Harvard's goal and upon failure to gain by bucking the line, the ball was passed to Brewer for a kick, but instead of punting he attempted to run around Princeton's right end, and was tackled for the fourth down on Harvard one yard line, whence Rosengarten was pushed over for a touchdown. Then Harvard braced and blocked Baird's kick and Shaw fell on the ball for a touchdown. During the remainder of the game Harvard was clearly outplayed. Baird tried for a goal from the field but missed. Rhodes blocked Fairchild's return punt and made a touchdown. In the remaining four minutes another kick was blocked on Harvard's fifteen-yard line and a double pass by Bannard and Suter scored Princeton's third touchdown.

Of this game, Caspar Whitney wrote:

Princeton won because, generally speaking, they completely outplayed Harvard, but more specially because their magnificent defence kept Harvard from scoring in the first half, and their spirit, team work, splendid defence and simple though thoroughly drilled and well supported offense proved irresistible in the second half. Harvard lost because the slippery ground was not favorable to their kind of attack, and the team lacked spirit to keep together and play, when the game was going against them, the best football they knew. Their generalship was poor, the quarter-back slow, the formation on kicks bad, and several of the forwards wanting in individual football knowledge. Harvard not only exhausted all their tricks in the first half, but used them inopportunately.

Not the least commendable feature of the game was the previous agreement between Dr. Porter, for Harvard, and Dr. Bovaird, of Princeton, that they should withdraw a player from their respective teams when in their judgment his further play would be injurious to him. This resulted in calling off during the game several men who were neither "knocked out" nor "injured" as the newspaper reported. A similar agreement should rule at all games. Princeton undergraduates cheered Harvard, Harvard undergraduates cheered Princeton, after the game the two teams dined together, and all in all the day was a splendid triumph for manly, clean, vigorous sport.

The following editorial from the Princetonian indicates the opinions of the undergraduates:

"A game like that played on the 'Varsity Field last Saturday inspires a renewed faith in the gentlemanliness and sporting honor of college athletics. Almost entirely free from every objectionable feature, it was a contest upon which either may look back with pride, irrespective of the success which its representatives achieved. In all the preliminary arrangements mutual concessions were made in a truly generous spirit, and both teams went into the game with a friendly rivalry which did not in the least detract from a desperate determination to win. During the progress of the game there was little to excite adverse criticism. The players worked hard and fiercely but not roughly. Of those men who retired a large proportion, three at least, went into the game in poor physical condition, and the others were injured in a purely accidental way. Especial comment may be made on Captain Brewer's generous action, in regard to a doubtful decision of the umpire. Insistence on the decision of the official would have given Harvard the ball in Princeton's territory, but he immediately admitted the justice of Captain Lee's appeal to a merely verbal agreement and the decision was reversed. The generosity of the spectators was so patent as to need no comment.

"Unexpected as Harvard's defeat was, she accepted her position in a graceful and sportsmanlike way, making no excuse and showing no unfriendly spirit toward her rival. While we hope that Princeton has not the reputation of using victory merely as an excuse for insulting and gloating over her defeated opponents, yet the general respect with which the visitors were treated shows that she knows how to accept victory as well as defeat in the proper spirit. The great lesson learned from the game, aside from the features already touched upon, is the advantage of holding college games upon college grounds. The absence of occurrences subsequent to a great game that do so much harm to the universities interested, proves that an outside element is largely responsible for these unpleasant features and that the policy of not holding games in large cities takes away the opportunity from those few students who are so thoughtless as to do anything prejudicial to their college. Upon very short notice almost perfect railroad and seating facilities were provided, and such difficulties can be obviated all the more easily in the case of games that are arranged sometime previous to their occurrence. Let us have the college games on college grounds before college crowds and we feel sure that the objectionable features attendant on many of our big games will disappear."

1st Half (25 mins.) No Scoring

2d Half (25 mins.) Touchdown by Bannard; goal by Riggs.

In the Cornell game the playing of the Princeton team lacked quickness and snap and not until the last three minutes did the team wake up and show how they could play. The ball was Princeton's on Cornell's fifteen yard line with but forty-five seconds to play. Rosengarten and Bannard plunging through the centre landed the ball on the two yard line and Bannard was pushed through the centre for a touchdown.

Yale won the game on November 23, by better generalship. She adopted the old style of rushing game, which the superiority of her backs made successful. Both teams were strong in aggressive work, but weak in defensive.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Bass; no goal by Thorne; 22 mins. 2—Touchdown by Thorne; no goal by Thorne; 34 mins.

2d Half. 3—Touchdown by Jerrems; no goal by Thorne. 4—Touchdown by Baird; goal by Suter. 5—Touchdown by Tyler; no goal by Suter. 6—Touchdown by Thorne; no goal by Thorne.

For twenty minutes of the first half the ball traveled up and down the field, with Yale trying the Princeton line for short gains, but punting on every occasion, while Princeton made good ground through the Yale forwards and kicked when she had to. Finally the play was in the centre of the field and Princeton was showing strong offensive work. Rosengarten was sent into the line, but dropped the ball, which, rolling outside the scrimmage, was picked up by Bass and carried across Princeton's line for the first touchdown. After short runs by Princeton and bad fumbles by Rosengarten and Armstrong, Baird attempted a field goal, which Chadwick blocked and Princeton secured the ball on Yale's forty-five yard line. After more rushing by Princeton, the ball was lost on holding and Thorne kicked to Suter on Princeton's twenty-five yard line. An exchange of punts, one of Princeton's blocked by Chadwick, miserable judgment and a fumble by Suter put the ball again on Princeton twenty-five yard line and in Yale's possession. Thorne's try for field goal failed; Baird's kick-off was returned by Jerrems to Princeton's twenty-five yard line, where, after Yale had lost it for holding, Baird's blocked punt gave the ball to Yale on Princeton's fifteen yard line; and on the first line up the ball was passed to Thorne who feinted to run across field and then, with a quick side shunt and a leap, passed through a gap in the line, on a Princeton player's out-stretched arms and fell across the line with the ball under him. An attempted drop at goal failed and the half closed with the score 12—0 in Yale's favor.

Princeton opened the second half, showing magnificent aggression and pluck, working her revolving tandem on guard, tackle, and around the end. She once carried the ball from her own forty yard line to within seven yards of Yale's line, where the latter got it on downs. Thorne kicked to the forty yard line. Twice Princeton surrendered the ball on downs and Yale kicked, and then Baird punted to Thorne, who caught it in the centre of the field and ran to Princeton's fifteen yard line. Again Yale set her offense in motion and Jerrems went over the line for a touchdown. Lea and Armstrong had been replaced by Thompson and Kelly, when Princeton once more began her splendid but wearing attack. Starting from the centre of the field she worked the ball without once losing it, down and across Yale's line, Baird making the touchdown. After an exchange of punts, Tyler broke through and blocked Thorne's kick at Yale's forty yard line. The ball bounded back and Tyler followed it down the field and fell on it beneath Yale's goal posts. Suter failed to kick the goal. Just before time was called Baird kicked the ball to Yale's forty yard line. Thorne ran back, pretending to get in a position for a punt and so called the Princeton backs up close to their rush line. But this was a feint. He dashed by Princeton's left end, he had a field full of tacklers before him. Cross, the centre, threw the ball back to him and he ran right and left down the field dodging the Princeton players, and made a touchdown in the northeast corner of the field.

The season opened with only three positions to be filled and a large number of efficient candidates, especially from the Freshman class; consequently the "Scrub" team was probably the strongest that Princeton has ever had. A large number of graduates came back and helped Captain Cochran drill the team in straight football. No trick plays were attempted until late in the season and then only three. The scores of the practice games were smaller than usual, for the team never played for a large score but to develop themselves into perfect form for the Yale game.

In the first game of the season Rutgers never had the ball except to kick it; and on one kick-off. Poe caught the ball and ran one hundred yards for a touchdown.

The College was surprised at the tie game with Lafayette. Lafayette had begun to train earlier and was in perfect condition; then, too, she had an exceptionally strong team with a heavy line and good backs.

In the Lehigh game very little kicking was done, but the eleven was coached to advance the ball by rushes and team interference.

Lafayette had an unusually strong team in 1896, yet it was not expected that they would prevent Princeton from scoring. Princeton played a kicking game and did not attempt to score by rushes until the second half. Lafayette held them for four downs on their twenty yard line and then carried the ball so rapidly down the field that they might have scored, if the halves had been longer.

The Indians made the first touchdown of the season against Princeton in the first half of the game on October 14. The ball was fumbled on Princeton's five yard line and Miller picking it up ran the length of the field for the touchdown. Between the halves, the coaches lectured the Princeton men, and they began the second half with a rush. Soon by straight football they had scored three touchdowns. Before time was called, an old fashioned criss-cross trick added another touchdown.

1st Half (35 mins.) No scoring.

2d Half (35 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Bannard; goal by Baird; 15 mins. 2—Touchdown by Brokaw; goal by Baird.

Princeton defeated Harvard on November 7, by the score of 12—0. The following report is condensed from Harper's Weekly:

"Harvard's play was doubly surprising—first in the unexpected revelation of strength in defensive work and again in the lack of judgment in offensive play, particularly in the second half of the game. All through the first half Harvard's line was so stiff as to withstand Princeton's most determined efforts. In fact, except for one Princeton series of line plays which netted thirty-five yards and Bannard's forty-yard end run for a touchdown shortly after the beginning of the second half, there was not a great deal of ground gaining with the ball in hand. It was a kicking game throughout the first half, and so far as Princeton was concerned, largely so in the second half as well. Harvard was out-kicked at all times, even when the wind favored her full back, but her kicking, such as it was, and some superb defensive play, kept Princeton from crossing her goal line in the first half, and had similar tactics been followed in the second half one touchdown might have been saved.

"From first to last Princeton played a hard game with rare executive skill and exceedingly good judgment. They wasted no energy in line bucking when fifty or sixty or more yards from the coveted goal line of their opponents. Whenever they acquired possession of the ball in their own territory it was passed back to Baird, who promptly lifted it into the territory of Harvard. There was little line bucking until an exchange of punts had put them within striking distance of the Crimson line. As a result when Harvard seemed tiring, toward the middle of the second half, Princeton's play had lost none of its steam or direction. It was extraordinary, Harvard could not realize her only hope of scoring, and only salvation from being scored against, to be in kicking the ball at once—every time they received it in their own territory. That blocked kick which resulted in a touchdown for Princeton, could be traced almost directly to a disregard of these facts. They had received the ball in about the middle of the field, where, instead of punting, an effort was made to run. It was lost on downs. Then Princeton punted to Harvard's twenty yard line. Again Harvard made several tries to run the ball out of their territory and when they had finally to resort to punting, the kick was blocked, and the ball rolled behind their goal line. Kicking invariable on receiving the ball, would certainly have delayed the touchdown and might have saved it.

"Princeton opened the first half with a strong wind blowing against her, and for a time confined her efforts to tandems and wedge plays. But Harvard's defence was so stout that the gain was inconsiderable, except on the single occasion when the ball was carried to the Crimson eight yard line and lost on Harvard's splendid defence. In the play immediately following, Harvard lost her one good chance of the game to score. Brown had punted the ball to the middle of the field where Baird's return kick was blocked by Swain. There was a clear field ahead to Princeton's goal, but both Moulton and Dunlop juggled the ball and a Princeton man finally dropped on it. Thereafter Princeton confined their efforts to kicking, and Harvard was not again within striking distance of their opponents' goal in the first half which ended with neither side having scored.

"The first few minutes of the second half developed a decision by umpire Dashiell that created some discussion, but seems to have been perfectly in keeping with the letter of the rule, although it should be more clearly defined than it is now. Baird had punted to Dunlop who muffed and the ball bounding away was fallen on by Brown about five yards in front of Dunlop. Dashiell called Brown offside and gave the ball to Princeton.

"A few rushes by Princeton and the ball was on Harvard's forty yard line where Baird tried for a field goal and missed, but it would not have counted even had the ball gone over the bar, since there was holding in the line, and Harvard was given the ball. Instead of kicking, Harvard tried to rush, and lost the ball where they had received it. The very next play resulted in Princeton's first touchdown. Bannard making a pretty forty-yard run around Arthur Brewer, who had taken Cabot's place, aided by the clever interference of Smith, who put both Brewer and Dunlop completely out of play. From this point on to the end Harvard seemed to lose all thought of generalship. Play was almost continuously in their own territory and although repeated attempts had shown they could make no material gain in running, there was no relaxation in the effort. Kicking was employed only on the last down, and the men drawn into the line in a most unhappy display of wasted energy. When Brown did kick, as a last resort, there was little force behind the ball.

"Baird had made a place-kick try at goal from the fifty-yard line, and the struggle had been uninterruptedly in Harvard territory when Church blocked Brown's punt, and Brokaw, getting past Brewer, fell on the ball behind Harvard's line for the second and last touchdown. For the remainder of the half Harvard continued her futile efforts at line bucking, never getting out of her own territory, showing plucky, skillful defence and miserable judgment.

"Princeton cannot be said to have shown weakness in any particular. She judged and handled kicks perfectly; plays were started sharply and every man got into them. The team showed it had been thoroughly drilled in its work and while the plays were not numerous or intricate, they were executed with telling accuracy."

Princeton, 24.

Yale, 6.

1st Half (35 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Murphy; goal by Hine; 8 mins. 2—Touchdown by Baird; goal by Baird; 26 mins. 3—Touchdown by Kelly; goal by Baird; 30 mins. 2nd Half (35 mins.) 4—Touchdown by Hillebrand; no goal by Baird. 5—Touchdown by Bannard; no goal by Baird. 6—Touchdown by Wheeler; no goal by Baird.

In the Yale game Baird kicked off, Hinkey returned but the attempt to punt was blocked. Again Rodgers blocked a kick and this time Bass fell on the ball behind Princeton's goal for the only touchdown Yale made. Then Princeton showed her generalship. Instead of continuing the kicking game, as planned, the tactics were completely changed and the attempt was made to rush the ball down the field. Yale could not resist the compact charges. Only once, on the five yard line, was Princeton held without gain. Baird was pushed over the line for the first touchdown. Later in the game Baird caught Hinkey's kick on Princeton's thirty-five yard line. But as he fell when tackled, he passed the ball to Smith who made a great dash for the Yale side of the field. His interference was superb, and he had covered nearly twenty yards before Rodgers brought him down. Then the battering began and Kelly was pushed over for the second touchdown. Within the first ten minutes of the second half Hillebrand had scored another touchdown. Then it was Bannard's turn and the last battering sent Wheeler over for the fourth touchdown.

This was the most decisive victory over Yale that Princeton had scored against Yale. Only twice had Yale secured so signal a triumph over Princeton—once in the memorable game of 1890, when Yale rolled up a score of 32 to Princeton's 0, and again in 1894 when the New Haven team won the day by 24 to 0. It was the strongest team Princeton ever developed, not excepting the very strong one of 1889, and it may be doubted if a stronger eleven was ever put out by any university. Not that its individuals had no superiors in collegiate football, but eleven men never worked more thoroughly in harmony, nor were plays ever started more promptly nor directed with more telling precision.

"Therein lay the notable power of Princeton's team on Nov. 21. Its plays were not numerous or especially intricate, but when they were put in action it was with a lightning-like speed that increased in volume as they swept on toward the Yale line. When the ball was snapped, the half back was already under way, and by the time it reached him his interference had formed and was going forward at top speed. When that revolving tandem struck the line, it was not as four or five but as one man, and the application was so instantaneous and the power so great that opponents had neither time to break it up nor strength to successfully oppose it. On the offensive every man got into every play with the snapping of the ball, and on the defensive every man seemed to consider every tackle his tackle. There were no spectators on Princeton's team. Every man had an active part to fill in every play and he filled it. No team has exhibited such unity of purpose and of action; not even those historic and superbly trained elevens of Yale which have carried all before them throughout a season's play. In only one respect was the Princeton team weak, and that in the protection of the full back on kicks. The formation on such occasions was remarkably inefficient, too many men being taken from the line, which, particularly on a muddy, slippery field gave Yale forwards a great advantage. With no immediate blocking, they could get under way on the instant the ball was snapped back and have acquired considerable momentum by the time they reached Baird's protectors. Yale was superior in tackling but for the rest her men were simply overwhelmed, crushed, and swept aside by the marvellous perfection of that deadly Princeton revolving tandem. In the seventy minutes of play, Yale had the ball something like ten minutes! yet she played with spirit and pluck to the very end—though certain defeat stared her in the face for the last thirty minutes. The Princeton eleven of 1896 was the strongest this country has ever produced."

2nd Half (15 mins.) 3—Touchdown by Reiter; no goal by Baird; 7 mins. 4—Touchdown by Kelly; no goal by Holt; 12 mins.

Princeton won the Indian game because of her team play, her better knowledge of the game, her more concentrated efforts, and her good generalship. The strength of the Princeton team lay in the defensive play which was stronger to a marked degree than that of the Indians. Offensively, also, the Princetons were better than the Indians, but several fumbles came within an ace of changing the history of the game. Twice an Indian player got away from the heap and made for the Princeton goal, with only one player between him and the last line, but good tackling by Princeton's backs saved the day with a clear score.

2d Half. 2—Touchdown by Wheeler; goal by Baird.

In the Cornell game Princeton made her first touchdown by Wheeler bucking the centre after fifteen minutes play. Baird failed to kick the goal. Up to this time the game was all Princeton's, but from then until the end of the half, Cornell braced up wonderfully, held Princeton's rushes, and made repeated gains through the tackles and centre. Princeton started in to play an open game but failed to gain and finally went back to close formation. Even this was stopped by Cornell time and again. The latter had the misfortune to make all the gains while the ball was on her territory. Princeton's second touchdown was made in the last part of the second half, when she placed the ball on Cornell's five yard line, with only a minute left to play. Wheeler went over the line on the third down and Ayres kicked the goal.

In the Lafayette game Princeton played a hundred per cent. better football than in the Indian game. The rush line which had been moulded into a fine engine of warfare, was like a stone wall at every stage of the game. All of Lafayette's mass plays, especially the guards back interference, were unsuccessful, when directed against the centre of the line, and the only material gain of any importance was made around the left end by Walbridge when he got the ball on a good criss cross play which netted about thirty yards.

Princeton played a careful game in the first half, the different plays being made as though there were no hard feelings toward Lafayette, but in the second half, when word had been received of the Indians' success in scoring against Pennsylvania, the Tigers cut loose and played the fiercest kind of football in order to eclipse the record of the Quakers. Princeton scored twenty-three points in the first half. After eleven minutes of play Reiter made the first touchdown and Baird kicked the goal. Eight minutes later this was repeated. Then Wheeler scored. A few minutes after that Baird made a free catch of a punt on Lafayette's thirty-five yard line, and from a "place" he kicked a beautiful goal. In the second half the touchdowns were made rapidly, and when Pennsylvania's score of forty-six points was finally excelled, the 4,000 spectators went wild with delight. During the entire playing time Lafayette did not get nearer the Princeton goal than the twenty-five yard line.

This was the last game before Princeton met Yale, and in the intervening two weeks the waiting took the fire and eagerness out of the team and set it on a nervous tension that sapped its spirit. The trouble was the team had been in perfect condition on November 6; then came the slump. The team could not be kept in condition; and Yale defeated the veteran Princeton team, because it had been suffered from overstraining and a poor schedule.

The Yale game was played at New Haven, in accordance with the recommendation of the University Athletic Club that all college contests should be played on college grounds.

1st Half (35 mins.) No scoring.
2d Half (35 mins.) Touchdown by Dudley; goal by Cadwalader.

The following report of the Yale game appeared in Harper's Weekly:

"After the snowstorm of the morning, from which the ground had been protected by a covering of straw, a northwesterly wind had sprung up and by the time the two captains tossed for choice there was a very marked advantage in the northerly end. Captain Cochran won the toss and took that end. In the first five minutes the two teams seemed to be trying their strength in both kicking and running. In the former Princeton showed the stronger, and this superiority was increased, as the ball rose above the crowd, where the wind had full sweep. Baird understood this and cleverly lifted his punts well up in the air. Yale did not handle them well, and her own kicking was not up to the mark. But the stiffness and strength of her line were brought out most vividly after the first few plays, and the two lines of forwards never met without an almost imperceptible yielding on the part of Princeton. This was the case in the Harvard game as well and it boded ill for the promised success of Princeton's plays which depended supremely on a stiff line for her gains.

"The advantage gained by Baird's kicks was growing less as the half went on. McBride was punting better, but especially was the Yale team showing itself quite equal to stopping any attempts at continual ground gaining in the running line by Princeton. So the half wore away, the hearts of Yale sympathizers being now and then given great jumps by some fumble of a kick retrieved by Hall, beating more and more calmly as the strength of the Yale team in defence became more apparent. Then suddenly DeSaulles found his chance of a broken up field and came flying down, dancing to the right or left, eluding or throwing off the Princeton men, until he was finally brought to earth with but five white lines between him and the Princeton goal. The Yale stands went crazy with delight, but a fumble on the very first down brought quiet more quickly than could a cordon of police, and Princeton punted back out of danger.

"A surprising feature was the blocking of Princeton's attempts at drop-kicking for goals. Yale's forwards twice ripped through Princeton's strong line and prevented Wheeler's attempts from having the success that might have attended them had they gotten off cleanly.

"The second half found Yale stronger and more dashing than ever. She made the only touchdown of the game after nine minutes play. The ball was carried through Princeton's line by Dudley and Rodgers for several short gains, and these with a penalty imposed upon Princeton for offside play—the only penalty by the way imposed for any cause during the game—placed the ball within two feet of Princeton's goal line. Dudley took it over and Cadwalader kicked the goal.

“During the rest of that half McBride's punting increased in vigor and became better in direction. When poor Baird, who had entered the game a sick man, and could no longer combat exhausted nature, was dragged from the field, the Princeton punting became more erratic. But with the odds increasing against them, the Princeton players and partisans would not give up or weaken. The cheers rang out as vigorously and the players went at it nobly. Without their captain and without several of their best players, the desperate Tigers hammered the Yale line back, yard after yard, Kelly doing great work and inspiring all his comrades, until the ball had been carried nearly half the length of field down into Yale territory, with Princeton's goal no longer in danger and with Yale's getting nearer to the eyes of the straining Jersymen with every plunge. Then a disastrous fumble took away the last gleam of hope, and Yale plunged irresistibly down until, on the very edge of the Princeton goal, the call of time put an end to the struggle.”

A bad pass in the second half of the game on October 8, gave the ball to the visitors at Princeton's ten yard line, but the Tigers held the opposing backs till the third down and then blocked their try for a goal from the field. Princeton's backs carried the ball well and followed the well-formed interference closely. In the second half almost an entire team of substitutes was put in, who worked better than was expected.

 2d Half (20 mins.) No Scoring.

Princeton, on October 22, defeated Cornell 6—0 in a clean exhibition of football. Cornell could not successfully break through the strong, heavy line of Princeton. Princeton played a kicking game at first, until she secured the ball on a fumble on Cornell's thirty-five yard line. Then began a stubborn rush which ended in Reiter's scoring a touchdown. The second half opened with Cornell's making some effective runs and trick plays, but they could do nothing against the line. As the half was closing Princeton forced the ball down the field, but it was a little too late and time was called on the five yard line, where Cornell made a plucky stand, holding Princeton for three downs.

The Brown game was remarkably clean and open. The one touchdown of the first half was won by mass plays on the centre after eighteen minutes of play. In the opening of the second half Wheeler's kick was blocked and Brown got the ball eighteen yards from Princeton's goal but lost it on downs. Then repeated plays on tackle yielded another touchdown. So with the third touchdown. The last touchdown, however, was made by Poe who got the ball from Brown on a fumble in the middle of the field and with a clear field, scored.

1st Half (25 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Black; miss by Geer; 23 mins.
 2d Half (20 mins.) 2—Place kick from 33 yd. line by Romeyn; 15 mins.

After a weak game with the University of Virginia, the half backs were not in the best of condition, so it was deemed advisable to make the West Point game a kicking game. But in this the West Point full back was superior. Then Princeton began to rush and scored. In the second half West Point made a fair catch on Princeton's thirty-six yard line and Romeyn kicked a goal that tied the game.

Princeton, 6. Yale, 0.

1st Half (35 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Poe; goal by Ayres.
 2d Half (35 mins.) No scoring.

Princeton won the Yale game on her home grounds by a score of 6—0. There had been no slump this year. The men played to the limit of their capacity; they were fit for the hour and each man played his best game. Yale had a stronger line, but her backs fumbled badly. Strange to say, Yale excelled in rushing the ball and yet lost the game. Princeton seldom gained five yards in the required number of downs. In the first half Princeton ran more and kicked less but in the second half she punted at once almost invariably. It was in the kicking game that Princeton made her ground, not so much in the distance of her own punts, as in running back with those of Yale. During the greater part of the first half the ball was in Princeton's territory, thereafter it went backwards and forwards, several times getting near the goal line of each, but for the greater part travelling near the centre of the field. Three times Yale had the ball on Princeton's twenty yard line, to lose it on downs, and once on the ten yard line, to lose it by the fumble which gave Poe, twelve minutes before the game was called, the chance to make Princeton's touchdown after a run of ninety yards. Twice Princeton had the ball on Yale's ten yard line, and once on her three yard line, losing it on downs. Chamberlain tried a field goal from the twenty-five yard line and Ayres made an attempt from the thirty yard line, but both missed.

The game opened with a surprise. Ayres kicked low and Cutten blocked the ball. Yale could not advance the ball by rushing tactics, so punted. Ayres returned the kick poorly, but Duncan fell on the ball and Ayres kicked again for fifty yards. DeSaullles fumbled soon after and Poe fell on the ball. Plunging into the line failed to gain and Ayres kicked. When Chamberlain tried to return the kick a minute later, Booth blocked the ball and Hillebrand dropped on it. A minute later the Princeton captain fumbled and Yale got the ball again. Again she failed to gain, and when the ball went to Princeton on downs, Ayres kicked it out to the middle of the field. Steadily Yale pushed it down the field again, her attacks being chiefly directed at Geer, who was unable to stop the Yale backs from gaining their distance. At the fifteen yard line Durston fumbled, and Poe, on the edge of the scrimmage, picked up the ball and ran nearly the length of the field (ninety-five yards) for a touchdown. Three Yale men flew after him, but he left them behind with every jump, and was over ten yards from the nearest tackler when he crossed the line. Poe had a bad leg before the game, and it was hurt again in one of the early plays, but when he had the ball and a clear field before him he seemed to forget all about his lameness, and ran like a sprinter. Ayres kicked an easy goal, and the score was 6—0 for Princeton.

Chamberlain kicked off to Duncan, and Ayres returned the kick out of bounds on the first line up. A kicking duel followed, in which each side fumbled the ball, but Yale's final muff was the more costly since Poe fell on the ball again. After a few short gains Yale obtained the ball for holding. Then it went back to Princeton on downs. An exchange of punts again was followed by unsuccessful attempts of the Princeton backs to gain, but her defence was equally strong, and the play was reversed immediately afterwards. Ayres kicked, and after two poor attempts at line bucking Chamberlain made his try for a goal from the field, but the ball went wide of the mark.

A kicking duel followed, until Yale fumbled again, and Hillebrand picked up the ball in the middle of the field and almost scored a touchdown. He was finally thrown on Yale's ten yard line. But Yale's line held fast three times and she got the ball. DeSaullles made fifteen yards on a double pass. He was hurt and Ely took his place. McBride kicked out of bounds at the right for little gain, and after two short gains Ayres tried for a goal from the field from Yale's thirty yard line. The ball went off to the right, and Yale got it on her ten yard line. McBride punted it out, and then time was called for the first half.

The second half was much like the first, a great deal of kicking being done and much fumbling. A few punts, and then Yale started an assault that nearly scored. Benjamin, Durston and McBride plunged through the Princeton line for big gains, until they had carried the ball to her twenty yard line, where Poe suddenly emerged from the mass again with the ball in his arms and three protecting Tigers behind him. He ran the whole length of the field and planted the ball behind Yale's goal, but the referee declared that McBride had called "Down!" before the ball was fumbled, and would not allow the play.

On her ten yard line, Princeton held Yale for downs, and kicked the ball out of danger. Yale kicked poorly, and Wheeler returned the ball. McBride returned the ball and then Wheeler made a long punt, and the Yale full back was thrown right under his goal. The three exchanges of punts had taken the ball almost the whole length of the field.

On McBride's kick to get the ball out of danger, Wheeler rushed it back to Yale's fifteen yard line, where the ball was lost on downs. Another kicking exchange took it to the ten yard line. Yale punted out again, and Duncan fumbled, losing the ball. Then began another line attack by Yale, which advanced the ball thirty yards before another kick was necessary. Another exchange helped Princeton for ten yards, and then the Yale backs begun hammering again. They steadily pushed the ball down to Princeton's ten yard line, where the Tigers held hard and got it on downs. The longest running advance of the game, sixty-five yards, had been made, but then the backs were worn out, and it was an easy matter for the strong Princeton defence to stop them.

Wheeler kicked to the middle of the field, and Ely fumbled it. Poe picked up the ball and started a third time toward Yale's goal. He was caught from behind, however, and when he passed it to Palmer, Ely also caught the latter. Then Princeton hustled the Yale line down the field to their ten yard line, and lost the ball there on downs. An exchange of punts followed, and then big Edwards blocked McBride's next punt, and Palmer fell on the ball only five yards from Yale's goal line. But the Eli's put up a wonderful defence, when another touchdown seemed sure, and the ball went back to Yale, who kicked it out of danger. Two more kicks from each side, and the game was over.

In 1899, Princeton had a veteran team, for only a few of the players had graduated. The season opened with a short trip to Maryland, when the Maryland Athletic Club was defeated by the score of 28—0. The second game was a surprise, for Princeton was able to score only five points against the Naval Academy Cadets. There was a good deal of fumbling on both sides, and it was after one of these errors by a cadet back, that Edwards secured the ball near his opponents' goal, and the Princeton backs soon rushed it over the line for the only touchdown of the game.

Princeton had expected a close contest on October 11 with Lafayette, but defeated them rather easily by the score of 12—0. Within two minutes Princeton got the ball on a fumble and carried it inside of Lafayette's five yard line, only to lose possession of it on a fumble. Princeton soon found her antagonists' ends an easy opening, and rushed the ball down the field quickly for the first touchdown. Toward the end of the first half, however, Lafayette gave the Tigers a bad scare, for she carried the ball more than half the length of the field, until within fifteen yards of Princeton's goal and then tried a place-kick for a goal from the field. Early in the second half Bray kicked the ball to Princeton's fifteen yard line, where Reiter caught it and carried it thirty-five yards. Levick gained five yards around Ely. Then Reiter scored the last touchdown after two runs of twenty-five yards each around Brown. Time was called with the ball on Lafayette's one yard line.

1st Half (15 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Levick; miss by Wheeler.
2d Half (15 mins.) 2—Touchdown by Poe; goal by Wheeler.

In the Columbia game, the score was small, because Princeton was severely handicapped by the absence of both her regular tackles, with the result that her line was distinctly vulnerable at three points, and Columbia broke through often for material gains. The first touchdown was scored for Princeton by the straightest kind of football methods. Bucking the line with an occasional drive into the tackles, but very little end play, resulted in a hard-earned score. But the second touchdown was largely the result of a fluke. Larendon fumbled on Columbia's forty-yard line, and Poe grabbed the ball, and ran, unobstructed, nearly half the length of the field for a touchdown.

2d Half (10 mins.) 2—Touchdown by Reiter; goal by Mills.

Despite the formidable reputation of the State College team, Princeton had no difficulty in rushing them down the field for two touchdowns in the twenty-five minutes of play.

2d Half (15 mins.) 4—Touchdown by Levick. No goal.

In the West Point game the Princeton attack showed for the first time the real spirit of aggressive play. There was not a substitute on the line or behind it, except at full back, when the game started, and the work of the team was just about as good as could be expected in the third week of the season. West Point was completely outplayed and gained the necessary five yards only twice. After four minutes of play with the "ends-back" formation Princeton sent Levick across for a touchdown. Almost on the kickoff Princeton scored, Kafer carrying the ball in a pretty dash around the end. The third touchdown was the result of a kick blocked by Hillebrand on the four yard line. The ball bounded over the goal line where Poe fell on it. With the game well in hand, Princeton turned to practice punting and only one other touchdown was scored by Levick.

1st Half (20 mins.) No Scoring.

2d Half (20 mins.) Goal from 30 yd. line by Young.

On October 28, the football world, and Princeton especially, was startled when Cornell defeated the Tigers, 5—0. In the first half there was no scoring; the ball moved back and forth with no perceptible advantage for either side, though the play was mostly in Cornell's territory.

In the second half the play was largely in Princeton's territory. Young ran back one of Wheeler's punts to Princeton's thirty-five yard line, then Wallbridge circled an end for fifteen yards more on a delayed pass. By dint of rushing Cornell landed the ball on Princeton's six yard line but lost it on downs. After an exchange of punts Cornell forced the ball down to Princeton's thirty yard line where failing to gain, Young drop-kicked, and the ball passed squarely over the bar. In the ten minutes that remained the ball stayed in Princeton's territory.

2d Half (20 mins.) 3—Touchdown by Levick; goal by Mills. 4—Touchdown by Hillebrand; goal by Mills.

Throughout the fifty minute contest on November 4, Brown only advanced the ball the necessary five yards three times, excepting the long run for a touchdown made by Richardson, which was allowable by Umpire Langford's decision, that the ball was not down when McCord let it out of his hands after carrying it to within seven yards of the Brown goal. After an exchange of punts and a try for goal by Brown, Princeton drew her ends back on her twenty-five yard line and then started down the field, averaging six yards on each play, until the ball was touched down behind the Brown line. After the kick-off Princeton again rushed the ball to the Brown five yard line; McCord was sent through the line for three yards. As he was lying on the ground with the ball to all intents and purposes down, Richardson picked it out of his hands and was away like a flash, without a pursuer, for a touchdown, which the referee allowed. Princeton's second touchdown was made after a forty yard run by Reiter and a series of fast mass plays on the tackles. Later Princeton got the ball on Brown's fifty yard line and on a double pass Hillebrand tore off the entire distance, dodging six tackles and scoring.

1st Half (25 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Knight; goal by Wheeler; 4 mins.
 2d Half (25 mins.) 2—Touchdown by Hodgman; goal by Mills.

In the Indian game on November 11, Princeton managed to keep the ball in the Indians' territory most of the time in both halves and her goal was never once really in danger. Princeton scored the first touchdown after the eleven had been playing about three minutes. Knight made a forty-five yard run for a touchdown. He got the ball after an exchange of punts when the Indians were apparently taken by surprise, for they were not ready to break down Princeton's clever interference before Knight was through the field and across the line. The second touchdown and goal came about the middle of the second half. It followed a series of mass plays in which the Indians had all the best of it. But there was an unlucky fumble by the Indians and then some punting in which Princeton came out so well as to finally have the ball down on the Indians' ten yard line, from which Hodgman carried it over.

Princeton, 6. Washington and Jefferson, 0.

1st Half (25 mins.) No Scoring.

2d Half (20 mins.) Touchdown by McCord; goal by Mills; 11 mins.

The last practice game before the Yale game was a disappointment. Washington and Jefferson's comparatively light team not only held the Tigers frequently, but at one time, in the first half, they actually assumed the aggressive. With forty-five minutes in which to score, Princeton was able to make only one touchdown. The first half went through without score, though Princeton had the ball on the visitors five-yard line when time was up. In the second half Princeton had the ball several times close to the visitors' goal, only to lose it on downs or offside play. Finally a double pass from almost the centre of the field gave Hutchinson a chance to run to the opponents' five-yard line, and the ball was soon pushed over for a touchdown.

In the final game of the season, Princeton defeated Yale by the score of 11—10. Princeton outplayed Yale in her running game, and only for a short time in the second half was the home team able to make any progress by carrying the ball. In kicking the two teams were about equal; but in defence the Princeton line was invulnerable, while Yale held the Tigers only at intervals, chiefly in the second half. The physical condition of the Yale eleven was considerably better than that of the visitors; and toward the end the Princeton eleven included eight substitutes and only three of the original team, while Yale substituted only two fresh players during the game. A blocked kick caused the only touchdown scored against the Tigers, the ball rolling over Princeton's goal-line and McBride falling on it. Princeton's touchdown was due to straight football of the best order however. A long end run by Reiter in the first half, with excellent interference, carried the ball to within a few yards of Yale's goal line, and two short plunges and another end run took it over. Both touchdowns were made at a bad angle for goaling, but Princeton showed good judgment, punted out and kicked an easy goal, while Yale tried at a difficult angle across a bad wind and missed, this failure to add the extra point ultimately losing the game.

The sensational features of the play, however, were the two goals from the field. In the first half, Sharpe kicked a wonderful goal from Princeton's forty-five yard line, with a favoring wind behind the ball; and with this score, it seemed for a long time, had won the game. With Hutchinson, the only drop-kicker on the Princeton team off the field on account of injury, and no substitute that could be called on, Princeton found herself twenty-five yards away from Yale's goal and only one minute of playing time left. As a last resort Poe dropped back and kicked a perfect goal. As Poe was never known before even to practise drop-kicking, and as this score won the game for Princeton, the play caused a most sensational ending to a sensational game.

Umpire, Mr. Paul Dashiell, Lehigh.

Timekeeper, Mr. Fred Wood, Boston.

Linesmen, Mr. Schwepps of Yale. Mr. Janeway of Princeton.

Princeton, 11. Yale, 10.

1st Half (35 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Reiter; goal by Wheeler; 12 mins. 2—Touchdown by McBride; miss by Brown. 3—Goal from 44 yd. line by Brown. 2d Half (35 mins.) 4—Goal from 37 yd. line by Poe; 34 mins. 28 secs.

Yale won the toss and Princeton kicked off against a strong wind. An exchange of punts followed by Sharpe's fumble and Princeton had the ball in the centre of the field. Each side tried to rush and lost the ball on downs; more rushing, and exchange of punts, and Princeton had the ball on Yale's fifty yard line. McCord and Wheeler smashed into the line once, each for good gains, and then Reiter, behind beautiful interference, went around Yale's right end for a run that was only stopped by Hale's fine one hand tackle on Yale's one yard line. Twice Yale withstood the onslaught of McCord and Reiter, but on the next and last try Reiter was carried over for a touchdown, and Wheeler kicked an easy goal.

An exchange of punts gave Yale the ball on Princeton's ten yard line on the latter's fumble. But Yale could make no impression on the Princeton line and surrendered the ball on downs. More end running by Reiter, and Wheeler punted to his own twenty-five yard line, from which Yale could not gain by rushing. Punts and short rushing finally gave Princeton the ball on her own ten-yard line, where, failing to gain, Wheeler's kick was blocked by Brown, and McBride fell on the ball for a touchdown. After a sharp exchange of punts, Yale had the ball in the centre of the field and by short rushes carried it to Princeton's forty-five yard line, where Sharpe at a slight angle, kicked a goal from field. During the remainder of the half, Princeton kept rushing for repeated series of good gains which Yale offset, when on a brace the ball came to her, by punting down the wind.

In the early part of the second half, after Yale got the ball on Hillebrand's fumble, Sharpe tried for a field-goal from Princeton's fifty yard line against the wind and failed; but from that time the ball remained in Yale's territory. After Sharpe's failure there was a period of punting exchanges, and thereafter very little kicking, each seeking to hold possession of the ball rather than give it to the opponent by punting. This, under the circumstances, was a policy of rather questionable wisdom for Yale, because she could make no headway against Princeton's defence, and was being continuously crowded down near her goal. The ball changed hands several times on fumbles and Yale just managed to get it often enough to save being swept over her line. Curiously enough Yale yielded the ball several times on downs so near her line that there was always the danger of a field goal. No doubt with Hutchinson, Princeton's only reported goal kicker, retired, Yale felt safe and ignored the danger. Princeton was putting in substitutes every other play and as Yale managed to keep Princeton outside her twenty-five yard line, it looked as though she might defend her goal during the few remaining minutes, though everytime she gave up the ball on downs instead of punting, one wondered at the judgment. Princeton's physical condition seemed exceptionally poor—such, at least, the wholesale retirement of players indicated. Only three of the eleven that started, finished, and perhaps not one of the least agreeable surprises was the excellent showing made by the substitutes.

Within a few minutes of time, McBride fumbled the ball on a play into the line and Princeton gained possession of it on Yale's forty-five yard line. Princeton forthwith opened another desperate attack, which scattered Yale like chaff before the wind, and carried the ball to Yale's twenty-five yard line.

There was now less than a minute to play, when suddenly Poe dropped back. No one had ever heard of Poe as a goal-kicker and everyone "in the know" looked for a fake kick and a run for touchdown. But the ball went back to Poe, who stood on the thirty-five yard line and before the multitude could realize what had happened, he had kicked the goal and given Princeton victory within thirty seconds of the time limit.

Princeton, 5. Annapolis, 0.

1st Half (20 mins.) No scoring.

2d Half (15 mins.) Touchdown by McClave.

In the game on October 13, the Cadets kept Princeton from scoring in the first half. In the second half, Mattis punted and the ball rolled to the Annapolis three yard line; while the Cadets were waiting for the ball to roll over the line. Mattis put the Princeton team on side, and Roper fell on the ball. Then McClave was sent through the line for a touchdown. Heavy rain and wind during the entire game made brilliant playing impossible. In spite of the slippery field, however, Princeton did less fumbling than in any of the earlier games. Princeton was forced on several occasions to surrender the ball on downs and once was held on the Cadets' five yard line.

1st Half (25 mins.) Touchdown by Reiter.

2d Half (20 mins.) No scoring.

One week later Princeton defeated Lafayette by a score of 5—0. The one score was made in the first half. Cure fumbled Mattis' punt on Lafayette's five yard line, and three plunges sent Reiter over the line. Lafayette was heavier by many pounds than Princeton, and its eleven was made up of veterans. Princeton won by closer following and surer handling of the ball and better kicking; also because of superior physical condition.

2d Half (25 mins.) 4—Touchdown by Mattis.

In the game on October 27, Brown scored first, on a placement goal from the field. At the opening of the game, Brown carried the Princeton team to the fifteen yard line, from which Melindy kicked the goal. Soon after Pell scored the first touchdown for Princeton as the result of hard line-plunges. The second touchdown was made by McClave, who doubled the end with good interference and ran forty yards. In the second half Mattis scored the last touchdown but failed to kick the goal. Then Melindy got another try at placement goal, from Princeton's thirty-five yard line, but the ball went wide.

2d Half (30 mins.) No scoring.

The following accounts are from the Alumni Weekly:

The last three games of the season were defeats for Princeton. On November 3, Cornell won by the score of 5—0, through superior play. Though Princeton was within striking distance of Cornell's goal several times, a fumble or four downs invariably gave the ball to Cornell. It was a wretched day. The field and ball were slippery, and it rained throughout the game. Princeton fumbled often and disastrously, but Cornell handled the ball admirably. Cornell was superior both in defense and attack. Two plays won for Cornell—a double pass following an attack on centre, and a straight, smashing mass play on the line. Also Cornell gained on exchanges of kicks, both in length of punts and in Princeton's inability to catch them. Soon after the game began, Duncan fumbled Starbuck's punt on Princeton's thirty yard line, and Taussig fell on the ball. On the second play Starbuck took the ball on a double pass and went around Princeton's left end for a touchdown, having drawn Roper in on a fake mass play on centre. Starbuck also kicked the goal. After several plays Princeton had the ball on Cornell's five yard line, but a fumble lost it, and a series of kicks ended with Cornell securing the ball on Princeton's forty-five yard line, Duncan having let a punt hit the ground, and Roper having gotten in the way of the ball. Masses on the Princeton line and delayed passes did the rest. Purcell scoring a second touchdown for Cornell, and Starbuck again kicked the goal just before the half ended Princeton worked the ball to Cornell's fifteen yard line, but lost it on downs.

In the second half the ball was nearly always in Cornell's territory. Princeton was in a fair way to score four times, but fumbles and downs saved the visiting team. Both Hart and McClave made dashing end runs, but attacks on the Cornell line were usually blocked. The first opportunity to score in this half was lost on downs, on Cornell's ten yard line; the second was Mattis' try for field goal from Cornell's forty yard line, which went straight but fell short; the third was when Hart fell on the ball on Cornell's fifteen yard line, but it was lost on a fumble on Cornell's seven yard line; and the last was when Princeton again had the ball on Cornell's seven yard line, but got the signals mixed and lost it on downs.

Princeton, 5. Columbia, 6.

1st Half. 1—Touchdown by Morley; goal by Bruce.
2d Half. 2—Touchdown by Roper.

Columbia beat Princeton 6—5 on Manhattan Field, New York, November 6 (Election Day). In the first half Columbia scored a touchdown and goal; in the second, Princeton scored a touchdown, but was not allowed to try for the goal.

The Princeton players had not recovered from the hard strain of the Cornell game, three days before. Also, they were outweighed by the Columbia men, most of whom were veterans. Both teams played very aggressively; it was one of the fastest and hardest games of the season. Taking Wright, their best guard, back of the line, Columbia successfully attacked Princeton's forwards, and this mass play, together with the line-hurdling of Weekes, enabled Columbia to score. In the second half, Princeton played the better game and seemed likely to score several times; the only tally, however, was due to Roper's long run.

Nineteen men were played by Princeton, which illustrates how hard the game was. Both teams were frequently penalized for offside playing and holding.

Berrien kicked off to McCord. Several punts and some desultory playing followed. Then with the ball on her twenty yard line Columbia began a series of successful mass-plays and hurdles against the Princeton's line, and after twenty minutes of play Columbia smashed through the Princeton line for a touchdown by Morley. Bruce kicked the goal.

Mattis was dazed by a blow on the head and gave way to Underhill, who kicked off to Berrien. During the rest of the half the ball changed hands several times and the play was very hard, but neither side was near scoring.

Princeton's superior condition was at once apparent in the second half. Hodgman had succeeded Hart and five minutes had not elapsed before Princeton by end runs, tackle-back plunges, and straight attacks on the line, had rushed the ball to Columbia's five yard mark. Then, when a touchdown seemed imminent, Columbia held firmly, gained the ball on downs and punted out of danger. Soon after, the ball was rushed back to Columbia's twenty-five yard line and Underhill tried for a field-goal, which fell short. Weekes and Morley gained through Princeton's line and Columbia had the ball on her own thirty-five yard mark when, after a mass play, Roper emerged with it, shook off his tacklers, and made a long run for a touchdown. Then an unusual thing happened, which probably defeated a tie score. Mills, who is a sure goal-kicker, succeeded Dana at guard, and prepared to kick the goal. Roper was holding the ball on the thirteen yard line, while Mills sighted for the goal. The referee was crouching nearby with his eyes on the ball, his hand raised and ready to fall when the ball was down. Suddenly, without any signal from him, three or four of the Columbia players rushed forward yelling "the ball's down." The ball had not, up to this time, touched the ground. It was still in Roper's hands. But one of the Columbia men fell on it and forced it down. The referee immediately paced off ten yards toward Columbia's goal, apparently intending to penalize Columbia for off-side play. Then, seemingly, he changed his mind. For he called the ball down and refused to permit the try at goal. There was a long discussion between the captain and the referee, the latter upholding Columbia's contention that the ball was down and that thereby the opportunity to kick the goal was forfeited. It would have been an easy goal. The referee gave the ball to Columbia in midfield. Princeton forced it into Columbia's territory, where it remained for nearly all the rest of the half. Three attempts at field-goals were made. Underhill had been injured and replaced by Henry. So Hodgman tried the goals, but failed.

Princeton, 5. Yale, 29.

1st Half (45 mins.) 1—Touchdown by Gould; goal by Hale. 2—Goal from 25 yd. line by Mattis. 3—Touchdown by Chadwick.
2d Half (45 mins.) 4—Touchdown by Stillman; goal by Hale. 5—Touchdown by Bloomer; goal by Hale. 6—Touchdown by Fincke; goal by Brown.

Yale beat Princeton 29—5 in their annual football game, on University Field, November 17. The light and inexperienced Princeton team was no match for the uncommonly heavy, veteran Yale eleven, and after the first ten minutes the outcome was a foregone conclusion, the only question being how large the score would be. To keep it down the Princeton players worked just as hard and as pluckily as though each foot of ground gained or lost meant victory or defeat—and that is all any Princeton man asks of any Princeton team. In spite of the very bad beating, it was just such an exhibition of never-say-die spirit as Princeton men like to think is a characteristic of their college—and don't mind being called narrow-minded for so thinking.

It was the largest score either team had made against the other in ten years—though in 1896 Princeton made the same number of touchdowns—and it makes the record of games: Yale 12, Princeton 9.

Yale was very much superior in rushing tactics; Princeton was was quite as superior in kicking. In following the ball and in handling it, Princeton was the better, but whatever potential advantage might have accrued from these, was not permitted to operate; except in the one instance which gave Princeton her only score. Two fumbled punts gave Mattis his opportunity for a field goal, which he did not fail to improve. After that, Yale was too wise to kick, but rushed the ball continuously, with only four or five punts in the entire remainder of the game. It was a winning policy. The light Princeton line was carried back at almost every point, just as the Yale line was smashed by Princeton in 1896.

A distinctively college crowd of about 13,000 persons saw the game. The new stands were filled with spectators and color, the cheering and singing was excellent, and the large crowd was handled admirably.

Princeton won the toss and chose to defend the south goal. Yale lined up at the centre of the field for the kick-off, and at 2:44 o'clock the ball was put in play.

Hale started with a long, high kick to Meier, who ran back fifteen yards with good interference. Mattis immediately returned the punt to Fincke on Yale's forty-five yard line, where Captain Pell downed him in his tracks. Another return, and as Meier attempted to make the catch the Yale ends and tackles gathered about him. He caught the ball, but dropped it when tackled and Gould took it on the bound and ran thirty yards for the first touchdown about a minute after the game commenced. Hale kicked an easy goal. Score—Yale 6, Princeton 0.

Mattis sent the ball on the kick-off to Wear on Yale's five yard line. Yale's interference closed in and Wear ran back fifty yards before Reiter stopped him. After a few rushes, Hale and Mattis exchanged punts, Wear fumbled on his fifty yard line and McCord fell on the ball. Reiter and McCord could not gain and Mattis again kicked, Wear again fumbled, and Roper and Pell fell on the ball, only a dozen yards from Yale's goal. The backs could not carry the ball over, so Mattis dropped back for a field goal. It passed squarely between the goal-posts and gave the Princeton partisans their only chance to feel merry. The angle was about thirty degrees to the side, and the goal was kicked from just inside the twenty-five yard line. Score—Yale 6, Princeton 5. After that there was no silver lining to the cloud that settled over the Princeton stand.

A few punts, a few fumbles, a lot of desultory playing, then some sledge-hammering at the Princeton forwards brought the ball to Princeton's twenty yard line, in Yale's possession. There Stillman fumbled and Reiter grabbed the ball and got away toward the Yale goal. He had a clear field, and for an instant it looked like a duplication of Poe's run that won the game in 1898. But Reiter had been working hard in backing up the line, and Coy overhauled him on Yale's fifty yard line, after a forty yard sprint, and so defeated another score for Princeton. The Yale line held firmly, Mattis punted and Yale then began a series of mass plays that gradually carried the ball down the field from her twenty-five yard line across the Princeton goal for the second and only additional touchdown in the first half. Hale missed the goal. Score—Yale 11, Princeton 5.

Yale's superiority from this point to the end of the game was marked. After Mattis kicked, Yale kept the ball, and play followed play, each one with substantial gains, until when half-time was called the ball was less than a yard from Princeton's goal.

The teams lined up for the second half at 4 o'clock, with no changes on either side. The half was all Yale's. After Mattis's kick-off, Yale scored without losing the ball, though she fumbled once (to her advantage) on Princeton's twenty-five yard line, recovering the ball ten yards nearer the Princeton goal. With no further delay, Stillman scored the touchdown and Hale added to it by a goal. Yale 17, Princeton 5.

The Princeton team was weakened by the force of the Yale rushes and during the next few minutes McCord, Meier, Pell and Losey gave way to McClave, Duncan, Sheffield and Butkiewicz. The line was somewhat strengthened by this fresh material, and fumbles by Yale gave Princeton the ball, delaying the next touchdown for a time. Yale's big full back and her powerful tackle pierced the line at will, and Bloomer was finally sent through centre for a touchdown. Hale kicked the goal. Yale 23, Princeton 5.

Soon after, Dupee, who had succeeded Hale at full back, punted to mid-field. Princeton rallied for a moment. Reiter and McClave made twenty yards on end runs, and Mattis tried for a field-goal. It was a hard one—from Yale's forty-five yard line—and the ball went low into the Yale rushers, one of whom fell on it.

Princeton's eagerness to stop the Yale attack brought several penalties, but her broken line made stubborn resistance when the ball was only five yards from her goal and the big Yale rushers were forced to fight hard for every inch of territory. Finally Fincke went over the line, on an end run, for Yale's last touchdown, Brown kicking the goal. Final score, Yale 29, Princeton 5. The game ended soon after with the ball in midfield in Yale's possession.

The following comments appeared in the Philadelphia Press the day after the game:

"As the great game of the Princeton season neared its end and the sons of Old Nassau all along the broad stands saw victory slipping from the grasp of their team, though there were tears in many eyes and sobs in many voices, no man faltered. Following the swinging arms of the leaders perched upon the fence, cheer followed cheer, and even while the blue-clad warriors pushed the Tigers down the field with the prospect of another score urging them on, only shouts and songs of enthusiasm and encouragement came from the Princeton stands.

"The game was over. Every Princetonian knew that his college team had been beaten on its own ground for the second time in one year. The relentless figures upon the scoreboard stared the orange-bedecked crowds in the face. A shouting mass of wildly joyous rivals danced about in the field below, and again and again there rose unkind allusions to the recent twisting of the Tiger's tail. But in the cheering of that little knot of loyal hearts there was no abatement. Not silence such as that which characterized the Yale crowd at New Haven last year, but the steady, deep pulsation of the 'locomotive' or the irregular cadence of the root cheer.

"Slowly the field was vacated. The Yale stands were emptied. Darkness was closing in on the victorious and defeated alike. The last straggler had passed without the gates. In the club houses upon the hill lights were being lit, but still in obedience to the cry of the white hatted figure upon the fence the little knot of Princetonians cheered—cheered the team, cheered the scrub, cheered the team man by man, cheered Princeton, and last of all, every man standing with cheeks stained by tears and hat in hand, they sang in husky but still enthusiastic voices each verse of 'Old Nassau.'

"The Tigers may suffer defeat, but the spirit of Princeton is still behind the team."

THE PRINCETON STYLE OF PLAY AND SYSTEM OF COACHING IN FOOTBALL.*

At Princeton the football players are trained to play straight football and little attention is given to trick plays. But the straight football of today involves many intricate plays and a complex system of signals. From 1876 to 1883, there were practically no signals, no prearranged plays; chance ruled the game. Whoever could grab the ball, ran with it; whoever got the chance, kicked it. But the ball was not passed to a certain man for a run or a kick.

From 1885 to 1888, a simple system of signals was used. For example, the following is a list of signals used in 1885:

- "Hold your man," meant a kick;
- "Guard your man," meant a run;
- "Hold hard," meant a drop kick;
- "Watch out," meant a run by the quarter back;
- "Play hard," meant a run by the end;
- "Mind what you are doing," meant that the quarter back would delay pass until rushers got through, then pass the ball to one of the ends;
- "Play up," meant a run by the half back, through centre and guard;

"Get down the field," meant a run by the guard. These certainly were not very intricate nor difficult to memorize. The plays were simple and only one or two men took part in each; for the rule that all players in advance of the ball were off side and consequently out of the play prevented complex formations and plays devised to conceal the runner. The runner was given the ball and was expected to gain ground by dodging the opposing end, or darting through a quick opening in the line. In this he was aided by the rules which allowed no tackling below the waist.

Excepting kicking, the line of play in which Princeton was perhaps at this time most proficient, was the passing game, which was developed to such an extent that frequently the ball would change hands four or five times before a down. A runner with the ball, who having a chance to pass it, failed to do so, was severely reprimanded. Speed, agility and the development of what might be called football instinct, "to follow the ball," were the main features of the game at this period. There was much opportunity for individual play, not, however, at the expense of team work. It was not so much in those days to know what play to make as it was to be able to skillfully make it, even when the opposing team knew what play would be attempted. Besides the simple signals, the teams then had an order of play consisting of perhaps ten or twelve plays. These, in whole or part, could be consecutively executed without any signals whatever, with much rapidity and dash, one play following the other by a carefully thought-out sequence, resulting often against weaker teams in a touchdown without a word having been spoken.

In 1889, the numerical system of signals was adopted, which with considerable ingenuity has been worked up to such a fine point, that now it requires much practice and a good memory for a player to properly master it.

In the fall of 1888 Princeton made a great change and advance in the style of play, under the captaincy of Hector Cowan '88. Before that time, the signals were uniformly given by the captain, no matter what position he played. It was then determined, however, that the quarter-back position was the logical one from which the team could be most advantageously run and the wisdom of that decision has been verified by subsequent experience. In addition to this change of management, three new plays were devised. Princeton that year introduced the great play of boxing the tackle by the end coming in and the half-back taking the opposing end. It was used with great success against Yale, Cowan in the first attempt making a run of over forty yards to within a few feet of Yale's goal line. Since then it has been adopted by all the colleges. Princeton originated also the idea of keeping only two men back when the other side had the ball, thus strengthening very materially the defense of the team. This idea has subsequently been developed further by keeping only one man back except for a kick. The third play was that of running a half-back through the opening ahead of the man with the ball in order to ward off the opposite quarter. In those days this now well-known play was considered novel, clever and strong.

In the fall of 1889, interference around the end was developed, though this involved none of the line men but only the backs; the man with the ball came last and was guarded and protected by the others. In the following year Yale took up Princeton's idea and developed it thoroughly and well, by adding three line men and making the attack almost irresistible.

At this time the most aggressive rusher on the Yale eleven was Gill whose great forte was to break through and block kicks. In order to stop him, Princeton devised the play now known as a fake kick. In the Yale game almost on the first line up Ames dropped back as though to kick. The moment the ball was in play Gill was through the line. Instead of a kick, however, the play was a run through Gill's position. Channing received the ball and was off like a flash. Gill by a great effort managed to grab him by one hand as he was disappearing through the opening. The trick had the desired effect. During the rest of the game Ames had all the time he wanted to kick and not a single kick was blocked. The Yale rushers feared to rush through until they saw what was about to happen. Then it was too late. The same plan was resorted to in 1890 with the same good result, not a single kick being blocked by the opposing team in any of the big games.

It was in 1889 also that Ames re-introduced the whirling punt which had been used with so much effect in the late seventies; by hitting the ball a certain way with his ankle he would cause it to shoot through the air end on revolving as though on an axis. The opposing backs had great difficulty in judging this kind of a kick for the slightest change in the wind would cause the ball to sail off and land anywhere but where the catcher had reason to expect it.

The decade, beginning with the year 1890, has marked a new epoch in the history of football. The first part of that period showed Princeton struggling with experiments, trying to develop a system of coaching, and a style of play which might more consistently bring their fair share of victories.

Experience is indeed a bitter teacher, for out of the first five years of this decade, Princeton succeeded just once in defeating her ancient and honorable opponent, Yale. From those years of toil, however, Princeton helped to build up a system known throughout the land as the "Princeton system," and one which if carefully watched and added to from time to time, should succeed in keeping her before the college world as one of the leaders in this branch of athletics.

The overwhelming defeat in 1890 by Yale was due partly to the loss of so many of the '86 champion team, partly to the lack of coaching, but largely to Princeton clinging to a style of game individual in its effort.

In 1891, Princeton following Yale's lead, worked more on the theory of team play, concentrating the greatest number of men at a given point of attack in the shortest space of time. On end runs, guard and tackle, together with the remaining backs, were thrown ahead of the half back carrying the ball. The end was used as a safety man in case of a fumble and to help shove the back when tackled. Interference for guards and tackles running with the ball was used after a fashion. The backs were placed nearer the line on offense, and the line men moved closer together. Kicking also received its fair share of attention, and was employed not as a last resource, but as one of the means of advancing the ball.

In 1892, Princeton was still making headway in the development of her plays. Though defeated twice that year, once by the University of Pennsylvania through the failure to kick a goal from a touchdown, and once by Yale by a much more respectable margin than in the two previous years, defeated, but not disgraced.

The results of this year's work showed Princeton working in the right direction. The mass on tackle play was developed to a high degree of perfection. End running was improved. The "help each other" spirit was taking a firmer hold. The quarter back trick was evolved and has been a part of Princeton's play ever since.

The long pass was again brought into use, merely for the purpose of keeping the opponents in doubt. Then came Princeton's banner year, and one of which she has every right to feel proud—the champion year of 1893. Yale had a team which was considered by all connected with it, to be the best in years, yet she went down in defeat before Princeton. The success of that year was due to Princeton's variety of resources. Besides the regular formations, which had been worked up in the three previous years, the new so-called "Princeton tandem" was used for the first time with a great deal of success. Flying interference which had been invented by Mr. Deland of Harvard, was also in the repertoire of plays. The kicking game was well developed and the long pass, used unsuccessfully the year before, netted forty yards, bringing both the Yale and Princeton rooters to the feet in amazement. Guards and tackles running with the ball between opposite guards and tackle, and around tackle, were developed to their utmost.

In 1894 and 1895 the only innovations were along the lines of developing the flying interference, but this style of interference was legislated out of existence by a change in the rules during the year 1895. Closed formations were also ruled against, but not to the extent that they were eliminated entirely. By the new rules compulsory kicking was introduced. Where formerly the ball was put in play at the opening of the game, after a touchback, and from a fair catch, by the means of a scrimmage, now a compulsory kick was required with a restraining line for the opponents, just as it is at the present time.

The straight back pass for a kick was used for the first time in 1895, as a check to the increasing number of block kicks. Instead of the quarter back taking the ball from the centre and passing it to the full back for a kick, the ball was now passed directly from centre to the full back, thereby adding an additional man to protect the kicker, and making the kick a fraction of a second quicker.

The defensive style remained the same, except that it received more and more attention each year, being recognized as an important factor in the final results of the game. The Princeton theory has always been to drive the runner in, in distinction to the opposite theory of driving the runner out; the centre being responsible for the space on either side of him; the guard for the space between the tackle and himself; the tackle for the space between tackle and end, and end for all the ground to the outside between the side line and himself. The two half backs and quarter back formed a shifting line, know as the second line of defense; the full back the third and last line; the quarterback worked in combination with center and guards; the half back with tackle and end.

To sum up in a general way, the game after 1890 by a gradual development changed from being an individual one, to one of team work. The old idea of one side of the line resting while the play went on the other side, gave way to the plan of having eleven men in every play, each man a part of the machine; the failure of one part to perform its function, causing a collapse in its entire working. Individual effort was discouraged if the same thing could be accomplished to a better degree by the co-operation of the entire team. The idea of individuality was lost and swallowed up in the more important element of combined effort. Instead of making a way for himself, the runner had a path cleared for him, and where formerly the man carrying the ball did the work, now the important work was done by the remaining ten men. This style of play was more exhausting and a higher degree of endurance was required, consequently the halves were reduced from forty-five to thirty-five minutes duration.

Princeton experience has taught three fundamental principles:

"(1) Start quickly. (2) Follow the ball. (3) Be in every play with your whole strength till the whistle blows.

Carry out these principles and everything else that is necessary and essential will follow."

The development of the coaching system at Princeton has kept progress with the game. As the game has grown more scientific and the system of play more involved, requiring more practice and greater preparation, in like degree, the methods by which the players are instructed have become more important and thorough. Instead of the players, as formerly, under the leadership of the captain and with the advice of the undergraduate football directors, devising their own game and working up the plays by themselves, we now have the captain little more than an instrument and in many cases a willing victim in the hands of the coaches who are supreme in authority and sometimes veritable tyrants in discipline.

During the period from 1883 to 1888 inclusive, there was little or no graduate coaching. This was confined to criticism from the side lines by any old player who might watch the practice on his occasional visit to Princeton or some practical example of how the game should be played by some recently graduated player, who, feeling strong in newly acquired avoirdupuis and more or less egotistical in his recollections of how he used to do it, would don football togs, and amidst the plaudits of the college crowd, would enter the scrub line. With low words of encouragement to the men near him, he would proceed for a period of about ten minutes to vigorously tear up the Varsity. As his strength and enthusiasm, however, diminished and his muscles weakened, his voice would increase in strength until presently you would see him entirely out of the play, but following it closely, and yelling, coaxing, exhorting, pleading and commanding in no uncertain tones or mild language, he would urge the men on for sake of old Princeton and the championship. This was doubtless quite exciting to the old player and somewhat amusing to the crowd, but of little benefit to the team.

But only a few of the old football men returned to help in the good cause, for the greater number were unable to give their assistance, owing to business interests. This trouble Princeton has had almost yearly. There were never more than three coaches on the field at the same time, except the week before the Yale game, when there would be a great gathering, and a superhuman effort made to crowd within that short space of time the instruction that should have been gradually absorbed during the course of the season. Each coach was a head coach in himself, attempting to impart all his knowledge during the few days he might be with the team, regardless of what the players had been taught by some former coach. Coaches who had played behind the line in their day instructed the line men, and the line men instructed the backs. The coaches entered into their work with enthusiasm and zeal, and under the circumstances accomplished as much as could be expected; but their lack of organization and the disastrous results led to the adoption of a more systematic effort.

During this period most of the coaching devolved upon the captain. Frequent evening meetings were held, when the checker board would be brought into service, plays explained and worked out, and individual faults corrected. However, there was a fatal lack of prearranged plays that showed more clearly in the last few weeks of the season. Up to that time Princeton would meet the same teams as Yale, defeat them by as large, and in many instances larger scores; after that period, however, Yale would make immense strides in perfecting team work, while Princeton was apparently standing still.

Interest in the game during this period was fast increasing, and aided perhaps by the greater notice given to the progress of the team in the daily papers, this custom of old players, sometimes substitutes and scrubs, appearing in numbers on the field at practice and indiscriminately attempting to coach the play, gave rise to much confusion and became a detriment rather than a benefit, it being impossible for the captain to distinguish or discriminate as to the capability of the old players who thus presented themselves. It became therefore necessary to regulate the matter, and in the fall of 1889, by means of the recently organized system of graduate and undergraduate management, which went into effect in March, 1888, the coaching was referred to a coaching committee of three old players. This resulted in Princeton winning the championship in that year, and was a great step in advance toward a more systematic method of coaching. The benefit was well illustrated in the

BROKAW FIELD, Nov. 12, 1898.

Harvard game of that year, which Princeton won by the score of 41 to 15. At the end of the first half of this game the score stood 15 to 10 in favor of Harvard, and it looked like a victory for her. Between halves, however, it is said that the coaches so stirred the team by fervent entreaty and impassionate harangue that the players went out on the field so determined that they scored in the second half 31 points to nothing. This gave rise to the custom of haranguing the men between halves, to which at one time considerable importance was attached. There were, perhaps, few things more impressive than these few intense minutes between the halves of a big game—the players rushed into the dressing room from the field—the doors guarded on outside and inside by two trustworthy "heelers"—the trainers and rubbers applying their liniments and sponges, and the coaches, one after the other, from the top of a bench or stool, making short exhortations to the men whose faces were strained and anxious, if they were behind, elated and confident, if ahead. Even this part of the coaching gave rise to abuse and had to be regulated by the appointment in advance of the day of the game of some two or three old players to talk to the men. These would prepare their remarks with care and thought, and their efforts would sometimes rival Spartacus' address to his gladiators.

For the next two years, there was no organized coaching. In the fall of 1892, the captain selected a committee of three, who with himself, should hold weekly meetings during the course of the football season, map out the work for that week, and notify those coaches who were best fitted to carry out the plan of work. This committee was composed of A. Moffat, '84, T. H. Harris, '86, and D. Edwards, '85. Under this plan better results were obtained, though it had its drawbacks. As the membership of the committee were business men, meetings were not held as often as contemplated, nor could the coaches always be present when requested. Nevertheless, it was a step towards the adoption of a system, and even with the drawbacks, the committee rendered valuable assistance.

The same plan was followed out in 1893 with a few necessary changes. J. B. Fine, '82, of the Princeton Preparatory School, was selected as chairman of the coaching staff. Frequent meetings were held, each coach had his work assigned, which work he was to perform and no other. Whenever a coach, over-zealous, or carried away by his enthusiasm, attempted to instruct a player other than assigned to him, or diverged from the plan as laid out, he was quietly but firmly informed of the fact; in this way a great deal was accomplished. Indiscriminate coaching was done away with. The team starting with the simplest kind of football, learned first the rudiments of the game, each day absorbing more and more, until working like a well-constructed team, it gathered its final strength in the Yale game.

One of the most important results of the work of the committee was in the selection of the eleven and the development of the players. In the late eighties, it was considered remarkable if a

PRINCETON'S INFLUENCE UPON THE MODERN GAME OF INTERCOLLEGIATE FOOTBALL.

For many years before 1876 Princeton College had taken great interest in the old game of American Association football. This game differed very little from the ancient English game of Association football, and was played with a round, black rubber ball. In those days the general playing of the game was between East and West Colleges on the back campus. The water spouts on the two buildings were the goal marks, and the method of selecting the sides to play was unique—a small number would divide as equally as possible in respect to skill and numbers, and those who came upon the campus later were appointed to one side or the other. Another method was for those whose name commenced with a letter of the alphabet above the letter M to play on one side and those whose name had a first letter of M or below to play on the other.

This general playing was very amusing, but was the foundation of Princeton's interest and prominence in the game of football. In team had two or three good substitutes. Now there is usually a substitute for every position. This is due to the encouragement that is now given to the Freshmen to come out and try for the 'Varsity. In 1888, there were not more than two or three Freshmen on the scrub and a Freshman who got on the 'Varsity was considered a wonder. No one took the trouble to coach or train up a Freshman or in fact anyone. Each player was supposed to teach himself and was not put on the team until he showed himself to be qualified. Now if a man gives promise of becoming a 'Varsity player he is taken in charge by the coaches and worked up, so to speak, into shape. The result is we have more good players, though they necessarily lack a certain amount of individuality that the men of the old school had.

In 1894 Phil King, '93 was elected to fill the position of head coach. But the system that had proved successful in 1893 was unsuccessful in 1894. This was not due however, to the system, but to the handicap of preliminary training, mistakes of judgment, and lack of support on the part of the coaches, who thinking the team would be well looked after with a head coach present all the season, failed to respond to oft-repeated requests to come and help out. At the outset, the team was handicapped by choosing for its preliminary training quarters, Quogue, on Long Island. The weather was unfavorable during all the team's stay, and the water bad. In consequence of which the team returned to Princeton considerably the worse for its outing. There remained eight players of the '93 champion team to start the season. This number was reduced by five during the season; three by sickness and two by injuries. In addition to this the mistake was made, and it was a serious one, of attempting to play these sick and injured players in preference to inexperienced but healthy and strong candidates. This same mistake was made in one instance in the following season of 1895. Since then, the system of coaching has varied from a head coach to a coaching committee. The present tendency is towards a combination of both methods.

There were many lessons taught during this period of reconstruction, but the most important of them all was the necessity of having a head coach, not only to harmonize the conflicting theories that the various coaches naturally put forth, but more particularly to see that the work was carried on as outlined. Princeton made good progress under this system, and continues to do so at the present time. In fact, in all the universities of any prominence throughout the country this theory has prevailed.

The introduction of graduate coaching has been a most important event in football, and to its influence may be traced the development of the modern game, for it can hardly be conceived that the undergraduates could have evolved the present intricate system and style of play without the assistance of the graduate coaches who have brought to bear on it their combined thought, mature judgment and ripe experience. In their hands, largely, lies the continued popularity and future progress of this great game.

consequence of the proximity of the game to the living rooms of the students, a larger proportion of men played than in any other institution. The result of this was that where contests were instituted with other colleges, Princeton was better equipped with material and experience than the others, and the scores of the games, when the Association game was played, bear witness to the usefulness for this nature of practice to us. I do not find a record of Princeton having ever lost a game in this old Association game, and very seldom was she ever scored against.

When this game was played for fun between East and West Colleges any number of men constituted a side, but when a team was chosen to play with outside institutions, it was made up of twenty men, picked by a committee to assist the captain elected. The rules were practically the rules of the English Association game. This game and the success Princeton had with it gave us the prestige which immediately brought us to the front when the Rugby game was introduced, and we started playing it in earnest.

In the old game there was team play, but of a very desultory kind. The team play arose from the intimate personal relations and constant playing together of the men upon the team. They knew each other and each knew the other's method of play, so that a common confidence was inspired throughout the whole team, and a certain unity of play resulted. There was no concerted signalling or signals given by any one man which were to be understood and acted upon by the men as a body. It was often agreed beforehand what would be the general style of attack and defense, and sometimes special plays were determined upon, but nothing in the nature of the signaling and team work of to-day.

The first set of intercollegiate football rules was made when this old game was in vogue, in the fall of 1873, in New York. Princeton met with Columbia, Rutgers and Yale, and formulated a set of rules which should govern the respective colleges in their contests with one another. This only lasted for two or three years, however, as with the coming of the Rugby game the Association game passed out of existence as an American collegiate sport. The prestige we had obtained by our success in the old game was a great incentive to become equally as prominent in the Rugby game, which was new to us and was introduced to the college world by Harvard. Princeton first started to play seriously the Rugby game in the fall of 1876. The game as first played was the English Rugby game, and the rules governing the play were practically the same as those used in England. The game was played with fifteen men, and was called Rugby for several years after its introduction. The modern American intercollegiate game should never be spoken of as Rugby, although it is a direct lineal descendant. There is as much difference between American intercollegiate football of to-day and Rugby as there is between Rugby and Association football.

The game was at first played by only Harvard, Princeton and Yale, and it was played for the first few years without any material or serious change of rules from the original Rugby. The province of the Intercollegiate Football Association, which was formed, consisted of arranging dates of games and awarding the championship to the winner of the season. The bright young American student mind was not content with playing along the lines of the old game, however, and the players were continually on the lookout to discover some point which was not fully covered in the rules which could be worked to the advantage of his team. In consequence the question would be brought to the attention of the Intercollegiate Football Association, and a rule made to cover the point. In this way the game commenced to grow away from its original lines, and it is still growing, although, probably not quite so rapidly as it did in the '80's and early '90's. As an example of this and also of the influence Princeton exerted upon the formation of the rules, I remind you of the invention of the canvas jacket by L. P. Smock, '79. This is the most important change in the costume worn which has ever been made. Before this the worsted jersey had been universally used, and the advantages of the canvas jacket as to greater durability and offering greater difficulty to a tackler, were immediately recognized, and it was universally adopted and still is an essential part of a football costume. Another Princeton man, whose name shall not be mentioned in this article, very shortly evolved the idea that a coating of tallow spread over the canvas jacket would make it easier for the runner to evade a tackler. This, of course, introduced a disagreeable and rather unsportsmanlike point into the game, which had to be legislated against, and the rule against sticky or greasy substances upon the person or clothes of a player still stands in the authorized rules of the game, and probably always will remain there.

The first very important change in the rules came when the number of players was reduced from fifteen to eleven. Princeton was a strong advocate of this change, as our game was essentially an open, passing and running game, and the argument put forward in favor of the change was that it would encourage more open and brilliant plays. This proved a wise move for, as the present game has developed, fifteen men or a side would block the field and make the play cumbersome.

The next important move that was made was partly due to Princeton's desire to hold the championship in the fall of 1881 by playing for a tie by means of what became known as the "block" game. Before that time it had not been compulsory for a team to gain or lose a certain number of yards in a specified number of downs or scrimmages. In consequence a team could hold the ball in its possession indefinitely, provided it was not kicked or fumbled. This was manifestly unfair and the change was made compelling the side having possession of the ball to advance it five or lose ten yards within four consecutive scrimmages. This was later changed to twenty yards at Princeton's suggestion. This necessitated the lining off of the field with five yard marks, giving it the appearance of a white gridiron, which it bears to-day. Besides the important changes many minor points were being discussed as needing revision to suit the American ideas, and the game was fast departing from its original lines. This was partially due to the fact that in the earlier days of the game with us there were few who thoroughly understood the rules, and the interpretations were usually the result of opinions as to what would best suit the team. As the arbiter of the rules in those days was the Intercollegiate Association, which was composed of partisan undergraduate representatives, each of whom hoped to gain some ruling, which would be advantageous to his college, it was very natural that the rules changed rapidly and drew more and more away from the parent game.

The most essential difference between our present game and the Rugby game is in the treatment of offside play. The most important feature of our modern game is the interference for a man who has the ball. Under a strict ruling of the Rugby rules our interference would all be offside play and be foul. This interference was a slow growth. It started, undoubtedly from the fact, as stated above, that the officials in the earlier days were not sufficiently confident of their knowledge of the rules. Consequently, when a player, who was offside, or in other words, ahead of the ball, ran into an opponent, the official would be pacified by the excuse that it was accidental or that he was running in a straight course, and the opposing player should have gotten out of his way. In fact, any kind of an excuse, so long as a foul was not called. This became so common that after a while it was considered legitimate, so long as the player interfering did not make use of his hands or arms. This interference was carried on in a desultory way on open field running for several years, but was individual effort, and did not make itself felt as an important element of the game until Richard M. Hodge, '86, quarter back and half back for several years and especially noted as quarter back, developed the first organized interference in his post graduate years of 1887 and 1888. At first it was very crude, but it marked an epoch in the development of the game. From this point the game began to grow along entirely different lines, and this change took away one of its fundamental relationships to the old Rugby game and sealed its estrangement from that game forever.

Up until the time of this important change in the game the rules were still being taken care of by the undergraduate representatives composing the Intercollegiate Association, but about this time it became very apparent that the game was growing so fast that older and cooler minds and judgments should be brought to bear on it. The result of this feeling was the formation of the Intercollegiate Graduate Advisory Committee, which, in addition to other functions, had the settlement of all questions relating to changes in the rules. R. M. Hodge '86 and afterwards Duncan Edwards, '85, were Princeton's representatives on that body for several years. They represented our best ideas and stood for the advancement of the game along sportsmanlike lines. This body continued to be the authority on the rules until the dissolution of the Intercollegiate Association.

There was a time in the early '90's, after the Intercollegiate Association went out of existence, that there was no authoritative body to interpret the rules, and, as the game at that time was developing very fast, in consequence of the introduction of the momentum mass plays invented by Mr. Deland at Harvard, it looked as if each institution would have to make its own rules. Recognizing the danger to the game unless some committee was given proper authority to interpret the existing rules and make new ones to cover the points which had arisen since the going out of existence of the Intercollegiate Association, Princeton joined with Harvard and Yale in asking the University Athletic Club of New York City to invite a committee of men, who were well known as thoroughly conversant with the game, to completely revise the rules. This committee met, and after long, careful and non-partisan discussion, presented a set of rules which have remained as the standard with few changes. They have been codified and indexed since for the sake of making them more easy of reference, but there have been few serious changes in the rules since the first thorough revision.

This has been called together several times since that by the University Athletic Club of New York, while that club was in existence, and afterwards by a letter from one of the larger universities, when it was thought some matter should be ruled upon.

The writer was Princeton's representative on the Intercollegiate Graduate Advisory Committee after Duncan Edwards resigned and while the Intercollegiate Association remained alive, and afterwards acted upon this Football Rules Committee.

*This, in a brief manner, shows Princeton's relation to the game, and the few important changes mentioned above exemplify the important influence she has had upon the development of the modern game.

We can claim that a large proportion of the marked variations from the original Rugby game and very many of the minor changes emanated from Princeton minds. We believe that in the past our influence in the long run has stood for sportsmanlike play, and that the weight of opinion of the majority at Princeton will hold us fixedly in that position in the future.

Track Athletics at Princeton.

The first organized Track Athletic games at Princeton were held on June 21, 1873, and were known as the Caledonian Games because Mr. Goldie, the founder of the games, was the Caledonian champion. Mr. Goldie was aided in the arrangements by a Committee from the three upper classes; but there are no records of the officers of the Princeton Athletic Club for the first two years. In the fall of '73, Princeton sent nine representatives to compete with eighty contestants, in the National Amateur Gymnastic and Athletic Tournament, which was held in the Academy of Music in New York, on November 8, 1873. There were twenty-five events on the programme and the Princeton men won fifteen first and second prizes, besides several third prizes; T. Sheldon, '75, won the medal given for the best general gymnast. In July, 1874, the New York Herald offered several prizes to be competed for by college representatives at Saratoga, immediately after the Intercollegiate Regatta. Princeton sent five representatives, and won second place in the Mile Race and the 120-yard Hurdle. Similar games were held in 1875, but the three Princeton representatives were not fortunate enough to win places. The following year the Intercollegiate Athletic Association was formed and at the first meet Princeton won first place. These meets have been continued down to the present year.

To men who are familiar with athletic training, these track records will tell the story of earnest loyal work for Princeton, work which has scarcely received adequate appreciation. No branches of athletics demand more persistent and self-sacrificing training than those of track and field, yet no department of college sport has hitherto aroused so little popular applause. Perhaps one reason is that the meets are at times considered but a protracted series of individual contests in which the uncertainty of victory is not great nor of long duration. The spectators are not often kept in that suspense or fever of excitement which is so common at baseball or football games, in which teams of individuals match their collective ability against each other; and yet a closely contested dual or triangular athletic meet in which the teams are about evenly balanced may furnish a greater degree of suspense than many games of football or baseball in which one eleven or nine is so much stronger than its opponent as to make the contest one-sided and the outcome certain. There is a sense in which track athletics do give opportunity for team work; the writer of this paragraph has many times witnessed a championship field meeting or dual games between Yale and Harvard in which the element of uncertainty prevailed to the very last individual performances, and the outcome of the games as a whole hinged upon, not only the work of the winners in the individual events, but also of the second and third men as well.

In recent years track athletics in all the colleges have made distinct gains in popular favor, a fact which is the subject of general congratulation, for no form of sport is more wholesome or better suited to the patronage of gentlemen.

When one recalls the drudgery and monotony of the daily grind of the track and field athlete in the preliminary training period, and the entire absence of the undergraduate supporter to cheer him on in his work, greater honor should be accorded the men who have represented Princeton in this important department of college sport.

The strides of college athletes in the past twenty-five years have been remarkable. In 1876 not a national championship was captured by college-bred men; indeed, up to the early eighties the collegian who aspired to such an honor or to the possession of a world's record was not easy to find. In marked contrast with the situation prior to 1880 are the conditions of to-day. If one doubts this let him scan the list of point-winners at nearly every important set of open or championship games in recent years. Instead of college athletes coming in for a small percentage of points won they often carry off from 60% to 85%; in fact, the great majority of notable athletes in the past ten years have been college men. There are many reasons why the average ability of the athletic collegian is now much higher than that of his brother in the athletic club, whereas, formerly it was decidedly lower. In the first place, the equipment for athletic development is, as a rule, superior in the colleges; then too, we must consider the far greater opportunity of the college student over the business man in the matter of time. The athletic grounds are usually close at hand, and it is often possible for him to regulate his day's routine so as to enable him to secure the largest amount of practice. A third advantage lies in the fact that the college athlete of to-day begins the process of athletic development much earlier in life. Years ago such matters were given little study and less time. The fourth, and perhaps the greatest advantage consists in the stimulus furnished by intercollegiate competition. The element of esprit de corps and the premium placed upon loyalty and self-sacrifice have brought into championship form many a man, who, except for the hope of striving for the honor of his college against a rival, would never have tried at all. Without the incentive of intercollegiate competition, 50% of our college athletes would abandon physical training.

These are some of the reasons why the college athlete of to-day averages higher than his older brother of a decade or a generation back. Then, too, there is a far greater abundance of raw material; college life has become so much more popular, facilities for study have so increased that many hundreds of men are going through college to-day, who, fifteen or twenty years ago, would not have thought of doing so.

Another contributory element in the advance of the college athlete of to-day is the great change in equipment and methods of training. The undergraduate of the present time may be much amused in perusing the earlier records on track and field, but he must make due consideration for the points named. For example: The hammer-throw is a very different affair to-day from what it was in 1876; in those days the ball of the hammer weighed sixteen pounds alone. A 3½ ft. wooden handle of about an inch in thickness was run clear through a hole bored in the ball. The weighing was not carefully done, but the hammer was more frequently too heavy than under weight. The athlete was compelled to stand still and throw the hammer over his head without follow. Nowadays the combined sphere and handle weigh sixteen pounds, and the flexible handle, with its double grip at the end, makes the implement nothing more nor less than a large slung-shot. Then again, the double or triple turn allowed in the seven-foot circle gives a man an inestimable advantage, so that the records of Parmly, Larkin et al were not so far behind those of the present day after all. The method of hurdling also has been completely revolutionized. In old days it was simply a series of ten individual high jumps with a "Garrison finish," the stride being broken between each. The theory of method has changed radically in nearly every one of the events, as for example, the crouching start in the dashes compared with the old standing start, and again, the old notion of running 440 yards. The first three hundred yards or so were run at a fast jog, and the remainder of the distance consisted of a sprint for the tape; in short, it was run off much as the half-mile is to-day, until the famous Myers astonished the athletic world by sprinting the distance through.

These are but a few instances of the revolution in ideas, methods and equipment during the past twenty-five years, and should be allowed for in all comparisons of records.

In the development of more modern methods and the improvement of records Princeton men have borne a conspicuous and honorable part. They have contested in large numbers and with good success in almost all important meetings, intercollegiate, national and local. They have given intelligent study to the technical and ethical sides of amateur sport and have contributed their full proportion to rule-making and other legislation.

As to their best performances on track and field, the following table of comparisons of records made by Princeton, Yale and Harvard men furnish the most conclusive evidence of Princeton's position:

It will be observed that Princeton records excel in six events, Yale in three events, Harvard in three events, and in one, the quarter mile, Harvard and Princeton are tied; the basis being the same in each, viz: the best performances by Princeton, Yale or Harvard men in any recognized amateur games.

It would afford the editors of this volume the greatest satisfaction if they could mention the name and emphasize the services of every man who has contributed to Princeton's credit in the matter, but it is obviously impossible to devote adequate space for the purpose. It seems unfair, however, to pass over in silence the work of such men as George D. Parmly, '70; Francis Larkin, Jr., '79; Walter C. Dohm, '90; Luther H. Cary, '93; Robert Garrett, '97, and John F. Cregan, '99.

Princetonians have always been justly proud of the exceptional abilities of her two great strong men of the seventies, Parmly and Larkin. Parmly was a man of fine physique and great strength. In 1877 he won both the intercollegiate and national championships at sixteen-pound hammer throwing. Larkin was probably the more versatile of the two, winning nine intercollegiate championships in five different events in three years. When Ramsdell (ex-'94, Princeton), representing Pennsylvania, won three intercollegiate championships on the same day in 1894, it was commonly said that a similar feat had never before been accomplished. As a matter of fact, the meeting of '94 was the fifth in which such a triple win had been scored, and Ramsdell was the fourth man to do it. In 1878, and again in 1879 Larkin succeeded in winning the sixteen-pound shot put, the sixteen-pound hammer throw, the standing high jump and the standing broad jump, and his performances were, for their day, most praiseworthy.

Walter Dohm, '90, was one of the best middle distance runners this country ever produced, his series of quarter-mile and half-mile races with W. C. Downs, of Harvard, furnishing a sensation at nearly every important athletic meeting in 1890 and 1891. He held both American and intercollegiate championships at the middle distances, and was also an intercollegiate champion running broad jumper. His record of 1:54½ for the half-mile has never been equalled, except by two men, Hollister, of Harvard, and Kilpatrick, of Union and ex-'99, Princeton. Mr. Dohm died of consumption in 1894 without having known that his half-mile performance had constituted a world's record for four years. Through an error the half-mile record had been understood to be 1:54¾, and was credited to F. W. J. Cross, an English university runner. It was subsequently discovered by Mr. W. B. Curtis that Cross's record was one-fifth of a second slower. Mr. Dohm's many and valuable trophies were presented by his widow to the Princeton Athletic Association, and are the admiration of all visitors to the trophy room in the Osborn club house.

Luther H. Cary, '93, was the greatest of American sprinters until Wefers appeared. When in form, the winning of championships, whether intercollegiate, national or international, was a mere pastime to Mr. Cary, who also won added laurels by defeating all comers in an athletic campaign in England. His record of 21¾ seconds for 220 yards around a curve was equivalent to somewhat faster time on a straightway course, and one of the finest pieces of running ever done on a cinder track.

To the energy, generosity and good example of Robert Garrett, '97, Princeton owes much of her recently recovered strength in this department of sport. His fine courage, perseverance and sound judgment have combined to place all Princeton men in his debt. He encouraged faithful training and practice, was an indefatigable student of new methods, secured the co-operation of many new men and spent money freely in the improvement of Princeton's athletic equipment. To his generosity the trip to Athens, Greece, upon the occasion of the revival of the Olympian games in 1896, was due; and his four years of hard labor were rewarded by the winning of the shot-putting championship of the Intercollegiate Association in 1897, on which occasion he defeated Richard Sheldon, of Yale, and established a new Princeton record.

Of the trip to Athens we publish the following interesting account from the pen of Mr. A. C. Tyler, '97:

"At about four o'clock the twenty-one competitors for the 100 metre race appeared and were divided into three heats. As F. A. Lane (Princeton), Thomas P. Curtis (Boston) and Thomas F. Burke (Boston) won their heats easily, amid the handclaps, there were cries of 'Bravo, Americans!' over the vast arena. The hop, step and jump followed. J. B. Connolly (Suffolk Athletic Club, Boston), was the only American competitor. He placed his sweater on the mark to take off, but the officials would not permit it to remain there. The applause was deafening when, at the last jump, he was the first victor of the new games.

"Then, in turn, the men of Greece, France and England, and last, Robert Garrett (Princeton's captain), hurled the discus.

"The efforts of the English novices were ludicrous. Garrett had practised a little during the forenoon; but he had not seen a discus before to-day. Consequently you may imagine our joy when the American competitor's first hurl was 27 metres, 53 centimetres. The Greeks almost tied themselves in knots in preparing for a throw, and then suddenly stretched out, and the discus sailed through the air. The best Greek threw 28 metres, 51 centimetres. Garrett's second and third tries were unfortunate, the discus first flying crooked, and the third time dropping from his hand as he pitched. But Garrett's first effort was sufficient to secure him a place in the finals. His two opponents were native Greeks, and one of them was the champion for many years of discus throwing, the other Greek was a famous weight lifter. Both were men of magnificent physique. The Greek champion, in the finals, threw first and scored 28 metres, 88 centimetres. Our champion, Garrett, followed with 28 metres, 72 centimetres. The third man was so provoked at Garrett's success that he was only able to throw 27 metres, 48 centimetres. The champion of Greece then threw the discus 28 metres, 95½ centimetres, and the other Greek hurled it 28 metres. Then came the final effort, and we all held our breath as Garrett carefully prepared for the throw. By this time he had caught the knack of hurling the discus, and had complete confidence in himself. He put all his energy into the last cast, and as the discus flew through the air the vast concourse of people were silent as if the structure were empty. When the discus struck there was a tremendous burst of applause from all sides, and we joined in with right good will. The applause of the Greek champions, however, was decidedly feeble. The throw was measured, and the announcement was made that Garrett had thrown 29 metres, 15 centimetres, and had beaten the Greeks at their own game.

"In the first heat of the 500 metre run two competitors started before the pistol was fired, and were put back 2 metres. H. B. Jamison (Princeton) was placed the farthest from the pole; but, owing to the others having been put back, he was enabled to jump inside and directly behind Poleman, a German, who tried to foul the American. But the only result of Poleman's tactics was that he allowed Jamison to gain the lead, and the Princeton man maintained it to the end. He was heartily cheered as he crossed the line."

In the finals on the following days Thomas E. Burke, of the Boston Athletic Association, proved the winner and W. W. Hoyt, of the same team, captured the pole vault. Tyler, '97, securing second place. Garrett added further to the glory of Princeton by winning the 16-lb. shot put.

John F. Cregan, '99, another of America's most famous middle distance runners, entered Princeton in the Sophomore year of the class of 1899, having previously completed his Freshman year at Union College. He had not, at that time, accomplished anything in athletics, and his development occurred during his student career at Princeton. In 1898 he won the intercollegiate championship at one mile and the half-mile, being the only college man in twenty years to win both events in the same year. He is a faultless runner of great speed and excellent judgment, and holds an enviable position among the great college athletes of this country. In 1897 he also won the national championships at one-half and one mile, repeating the latter performance in 1898; while in 1899 he won the Intercollegiate Cross-country Championship, covering the distance of six and two-thirds miles in record-breaking time.

In closing it may be of interest to summarize briefly the more important series of games in which Princeton has taken part. At first the tendency was to confine the contests to the college, except in the annual intercollegiate meet. With the single exception of the meet with Columbia in 1877, dual meets did not begin until 1892; then Princeton met Columbia again, and instituted a series of annual contests. In 1895 and again in 1900 games were held with the University of California. Once only, in 1896, Yale and Princeton have met in dual games. The latest series began in 1899 with Cornell.

In 1879 preliminary games were held in the spring in preparation for the intercollegiate meet; and in the fall handicap games were held to bring out the candidates for brief training. In 1880 the epidemic of typhoid fever interrupted all athletics. A year later the winter sports were held in April to encourage indoor training. Soon these were joined with the gymnastic exhibition on Washington's Birthday. The contests between classes were further increased in 1883 by the revival of the preliminary games, which for three years were called the class championship games. For two years these class contests aroused a great deal of attention, but all interest seemed to die out, and finally, in 1886, the class championship games, and in 1889 the preliminary games were abandoned. One year later a substitute for these spring meets was started in the open handicap games, which are still held. In 1883 the first annual Fall handicap games were held, but in 1899 these games were abandoned, and the men were encouraged to enter the cross country runs. In 1897 a series of interscholastic games was inaugurated. These, for several years, have been the most representative scholastic games held in the east.

In 1883 E. C. Peace, '83, presented the association with a cup valued at $250 as a class trophy, to be awarded each year to the class scoring the greatest number of points in the Caledonian games and to become the permanent property of the class winning it four consecutive years. The class of '84 won it in 1883; '85 in 1884; '86 in 1885; '88 in 1886, 1887 and 1888; '90 in 1889, and the class of '93 won permanent possession of the cup in 1890, 1891, 1892 and 1893. In 1895 J. W. Garrett, '95, gave the association, under the same conditions, a similar cup called "The Princeton University Caledonian Class Championship Cup." The class of '97 won this in 1895, 1896 and 1897; '99 in 1898; '02 in 1899 and 1900, and '04 in 1901. In 1895, Rodman Wanamaker, '86, gave the association a class relay cup, to become the permanent property of the class winning it four consecutive years. These races were held about May 1st, and lately have been decided in connection with the interscholastic games. The class of '97 won in 1895, 1896, 1897; '98 in 1898; '00 in 1899, and 1900, and '04 in 1901.

In 1900 Princeton sent the following team to compete in the Olympic Games at Paris: J. F. Cregan '99, F. W. Jarvis '00, W. C. Carroll '00, A. W. Coleman '02, D. S. Horton '03, and J. M. Perry '03. J. W. Jameson '01 was the manager and Walter Christie the trainer. Landing at Southampton, the team went to London, whence, after a few days, they went to their training quarters at Brighton, a resort on the English Channel. Here the weather was cold and damp, such as the men were wholly unaccustomed to, and this soon began to tell on their condition.

In the handicap games of the London Athletic Club on June 30, Horton and Coleman tied for the first place in the pole-vault and Carroll won the high jump. All were scratch men. Cregan and Jarvis did not enter and Perry had injured his knee at Brighton, which injury excluded him later from the Paris games. The following Saturday, July 7, in the English championship games at London, Jarvis won second in the 100-yard dash, Cregan second in the half, Carroll second in the high jump, Horton fourth in the pole-vault, and Garrett '97, who had joined the team at Brighton, third in the shot-put.

From London the team went to their training quarters at Neuilly, a suburb of Paris. Here they were informed that they would be expected to compete on Sunday, a demand which clearly violated the understanding with which the team had entered. Upon the proposal of the American collegians, a meeting of the representatives of the teams and the officials of the games was held Wednesday evening, July 11. A compromise was arranged by which no events decided by measurements, viz., jumps and vaults and weight throwing, would be held Sunday, and men entered for these events could perform Saturday or Monday, according to their choice. Princeton decided to compete on Monday.

The games began July 14. Jarvis won the 100-metre dash. Duffy of Georgetown was the most promising of the other contestants in this race, but he fell when about half way to the finish. Cregan finished second in the half-mile. Tysoe, of England, winning by two yards. It is but just to state that Cregan's condition was much poorer than when he ran in the intercollegiate games in New York, and his customary final spurt was wanting in Paris. This opinion was freely expressed by Mr. M. C. Murphy and other American authorities.

When Carroll, Coleman and Horton came to the grounds Monday morning, they were informed that their events had been held Sunday and they could not now compete for the world's championship. It was then also that the Princeton men learned that the officials had met privately on Saturday evening, revoked their decision of Wednesday evening, and had scheduled the "measurement" events for Sunday. The men from the Universities of Pennsylvania and Georgetown had learned of the change and, except those who refused from religious scruples or on orders from their home universities, contested on Sunday. Prinstein of Syracuse and Bascom Johnson of Yale were among the other sufferers from French duplicity.

Carroll spiked his knee in practice on Tuesday and was unable to enter the handicap jump on Thursday. Coleman and Horton were resting in the shade of a tree, waiting to be called for the handicap pole-vault, when they saw some others vaulting; they inquired as to the event, and were informed that they had lost their turn and hence their chance to enter, for which they should have been called. They were allowed to take part in another pole-vaulting contest, which was being held at the same time. This Horton won. By this peculiar arrangement he was possibly deprived of the world's championship, which, with five centimetres handicap, he had an excellent chance of winning.

At the present time, Princeton's opportunities for success in track and field athletics are brighter than ever before. Her candidates are more numerous, their average quality higher and the nucleus of a winning team at hand. Let us remember, as men who love Old Nassau, that these brethren are striving for the honor of Princeton full as nobly and with no less of self-abnegation than those of the football and baseball squads and, true to that fine old Princeton spirit of which we are all so proud, let us make our track and field athletes feel that our hearts, our hopes are all with them as they struggle for the glory of our well-loved Alma Mater.

GYMNASTICS AT PRINCETON.

Every sport at Princeton has had its good years and its off years, its "ups and downs," claiming for a while the popularity of the students to yield it later to another amusement. Especially is this true of gymnastic exercise. Prior to the year 1839 the students were confined to what is called "home" or "parlor" exercise. A few students in East and West Colleges put up horizontal bars in their rooms which, with dumb-bells and Indian clubs afforded their friends some profitable entertainment.

In 1837 a little gymnasium was opened for a club of students in an old building on Washington Street.

It was not until 1859 that a college gymnasium was built, and the first period of popularity for such exercise reached its height a year later. The summer of 1865, when this building was destroyed, marks the lowest point of the first decline. But by the year 1870, the interest had revived; the present building was erected, and the gymnastic contests in the spring formed the most important social-athletic event of the college year. The reaction came in the eighties, and the Gym was neglected for the rapidly developing out-door sports. The third period of popularity began in the early nineties when the Gymnastic Association was made a college organization. But in a few years, indifference supplanted interest; the organization was maintained more from a sense of college loyalty than from pleasure. The year of 1901, however, with its well-organized gymnasium committee and its growing subscription list, will undoubtedly witness the fourth revival of interest. Yet it is doubtful whether this new building that is to cost $100,000 will be welcomed with as much enthusiasm as that first little Gym of '59 costing barely $1,500. To be sure there had been a gymnasium for a club in the class of '39, but with their graduation it was discontinued and forgotten. These students in the earlier part of their course purchased some apparatus in Philadelphia and had it erected in the old academy building which stood on Washington Street behind Marquand Chapel. Here they took their exercise secretly, because they did not know how the faculty would view the matter. When the authorities discovered the meetings, it was at first supposed they were those of a secret society or fraternity. But the matter was subsequently properly arranged. This, however, was for a club only; when the first gymnasium for the whole college was opened in 1859 it naturally aroused great interest.

Of course in 1859 there were fewer demands on the students' athletic energy, spirit, and purse. Only a few men were playing baseball, and still fewer playing cricket. It is this year, however, that marks the beginning of the present athletic spirit, of college rivalry and self-development.

In the fall of 1858 the following article in the Lit reflects the discussion among the students:

"There is a subject too little touched upon in connection with student life, which seems to us highly important—the gymnasium. The student needs in an eminent degree something to counteract the enervating effects of continued mental labor. The gymnasium is the very thing for this, and Nassau Hall should have one; large, well lighted and ventilated, and amply furnished with every appliance to develop and strengthen the physique of her sons, where the student, unimpeded by coat or stiff cravat, could take a bout with the gloves, or with 'braced chest and supple arm, dart the shining foil.' $1,000 would build a noble gymnasium and $5 per year from each one of the 200 subscribers would maintain it in splendid order, and pay the salary of a teacher who could instruct the students how and when to exercise, and give them boxing and fencing lessons."

"Our students are not alone in their growing desire to pay more attention to physical culture while preparing mentally for the duties of life. The students of many of the colleges are moving in the matter of having better provision made for the full development of their physique. No subject can more justly claim their attention; none more imperatively *demand*s ours; both because we are far behind many of our sister colleges, and because the subject has been hitherto entirely neglected by the authorities, and too little attended by the students themselves. It is a very great mistake to suppose it possible to break down the physical energies in youth, and then to accomplish an amount of labor in after years equal to what could have been performed if the culture of the physical man had kept pace with that of the intellectual in his earlier years. We are, therefore, most anxious to witness the success of the effort now being made to erect a gymnasium."

Under the leadership of two athletes and gymnasts in the Senior class, A. A. Lyon, '59, and W. B. Wright, '59, the subject was thoroughly discussed, and as all the students were in favor of the movement a committee on construction was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Lyon and Wright of the Senior class, and J. W. Alexander, '60, and R. K. Noye, '61.

They drew up plans for the building, made estimates, started a systematic canvass of the students, and finally influenced "the president and his noble coadjutors to become responsible for the payment of half the cost" of the "institution," which every one expected would enable "the sons of Nassau to take a higher stand than ever in numbers and literary merit." By spring the necessary $1,500 had been subscribed, and the building was begun in March, 1859. The site selected was in the field almost directly behind West College, and perhaps about midway between it and Halsted Observatory—somewhat nearer West College possibly. The building was a simple oblong wooden box, thirty by seventy feet in area, and facing north. The walls were dressed boards, put up "shanghai" style after the fashion of railway depots; the cracks were stripped or slatted and the roof was of shingles. The eaves were perhaps fifteen feet above the ground, and the whole was painted a reddish brown.

About the time the building was completed the committee heard of a gymnasium in Trenton that had closed out and the apparatus was for sale. This was secured at a cost of fifty dollars more or less and placed it in the primitive structure. Some further apparatus was secured from the private gymnasium of Richard Stockton, and later J. W. Alexander, '60, was fortunate in obtaining some second-hand machines from the New York gymnasium of John Wood. These fixtures were meagre in quantity and very simple, both as regards quality and variety. There were some parallel bars, some pulleys with weights, a horizontal bar, a few swings with hand rings attached, a mattress or two, and other things for the development of youthful muscle.

To this little stoveless gymnasium the students came during the winter as they felt inclined. The building was small, the equipment defective, but yet there was lots of room and opportunity to "loosen the joints and strengthen limbs stiffened and crooked with study."

"There were no instructors, no gymnastic suits, no classes—nothing whatever suggestive of system in this branch of modern education, any more than is found in the 'corner ball,' 'marble-play,' 'rolly-holly,' and so forth of the old field school. Just as the spirit moved us to take exercise we would visit the gymnasium, take off our coats and 'pitch-in' and 'skin the cat,' 'chin-up,' 'run the bars' as each man listed, and quit when he got enough."

One student who used this Gym writes :

"The gymnasium was a popular institution in my day—at least as long as the college authorities took interest enough in it to keep it properly furnished with apparatus. It was a great boon to many. For myself I have always felt profoundly grateful for it. It did wonders for me physically. When I entered college I was a little fellow of seventeen years, weighing not more than 115 or 120 pounds, with round shoulders and flat chest. When I graduated three years later I was as straight as a ramrod, full-chested, agile, muscular, and have enjoyed excellent health ever since."

This popularity was not long lived for the time came when

"all day long, from its open doors and windows, resounded across the ball-ground, or rather cow pasture, the shrill shrieks of dirty little snobs pitching ball within its precincts, or playfully rolling the big dumb-bells into the numerous holes in the floor. At sunrise might have been heard, by any one of the very few who were awake at that time of day, the trumpet notes of some early bird seeking the worm of Junior oratorship, or that of a good grade of declamation. The clear tones of one of these ambitious youths so pierced the tympanum of one of our professors who happened to 'scent the morning air' about that time, that he compared the voice to a 'bar of iron half a mile long.'"

In the spring of 1864 the Gym was sadly in need of repair, and the class of '66 appointed a committee, of which Spencer Trask was chairman, to provide it with a stove and some new apparatus.

Thus it stood with more or less use until the summer of 1865. The students had gone home and the campus was deserted. A poor sick tramp wandered into the town, and, getting nothing but sympathy from the housekeepers, crept into the old Gym to sleep. In the morning his feeble cries attracted the attention of a workman ; a physician was summoned and found the tramp in the last stages of smallpox. This alarmed the whole town, and all possible precautions were taken to prevent a spread of the disease. On the 2d of August the tramp died and was buried. That very same night the Gym was set on fire in several places and burned to the ground ; although a feeble midnight alarm had been sounded, no one attempted to suppress the flames nor was any serious attempt made to discover the incendiary, for the whole town was glad that the place of infection had been destroyed, and probably, even if allowed to stand, no one would have entered the building, so great was the dread of smallpox at the time.

For the next three years there was no gymnasium nor any definite movement to get one. A few of the students went over to the small Gym in the seminary buildings, but the majority were satisfied to take a few walks, to Jugtown and Stony Creek. All the college publications were filled with appeals for a new gymnasium, and pathetic laments over "the mass of blackened ruins lying in the north-west corner of the baseball field."

"That cloister life here should make men—young men—sedentary in their habits, indisposed to physical exertion, lazy, is an evil. The cause lies in the fact that here, strange to say, there is no gymnasium."

"We are persuaded that many a young man, who might have been of the highest benefit to his country and his race, has left this institution only to be cut off before his powers could be made available, because of disease contracted here from the want of proper means for preserving the health."

Even the Nassau Herald writes :

"We have been almost daily reminded of the vital connection between body and mind, how they act and react upon each other; of the vast influence which the physical structures of men will have on their respective styles of writing, and hence oratory ; and yet the means of acquiring good physical development have been withheld. It is like giving instructions as to the manner in which a building must be erected, without providing the necessary implements with which to work. It is true that there are opportunities for exercise upon the ball-field, yet these are enjoyed by a very few, and moreover these privileges are afforded by the students themselves. We trust that, ere long, they who are constantly building theoretical gymnasiums for the benefit of the students will become awakened to the fact of the necessity of such as are practical."

Like more recent appeals from the Lit, these were of no avail, and the students were beginning to despair of Princeton's ability to maintain her standing with the other institutions of the land. But in 1868 there was a change ; the prospect became bright. Dr. James McCosh had come to Princeton, and at once advocated the establishment of a gymnasium. His quick eye noticed this lack, and perhaps his ear, which was ever ready to hear the students' side of a case, had heard the oft-repeated desire of the student body for such a building. At any rate, in the midst of his inaugural address he saw it fit to say :

"Education ought to be a gymnastic to all our powers, not overlooking those of the body ; that every muscle may be braced to its manly use ; that our students may be able to assume the natural posture, and make proper use of their arms and limbs, which so many of our best scholars feel in their public appearances to be inconvenient appendages.

"Of late years, certain generous benefactors have endowed chairs in the college, and now we have a princely merchant devoting a large sum to its extension generally, and a well-known friend of science aims at placing on our height, with its wide horizon, the finest observatory in the world. They will be followed, I trust, by others. The friends of Princeton must come forward at this time to uphold her, and make her worthy of her ancient reputation, and enable her to advance with the times: one whom God has blessed, increasing the salaries of our hard-working and underpaid professors, who should be set free from drudgery and worldly anxieties to give a portion of their energy to the furtherance of learning and science ; a second, by providing further accommodation for our students, that we may receive and house comfortably all who apply ; a third, by erecting a gymnasium for the bracing of the bodily frame ; a fourth, by enlarging our library or scientific apparatus ; a fifth, by founding a scholarship, or junior fellowship, for the encouragement of letters and high merit among students ; and a sixth, by founding a new chair required by the progress of knowledge ; we have scope here for every man's tastes and predilections."

These words were heard by Mr. Robert Bonner and Mr. Henry G. Marquand, and at the conclusion of the meeting they announced to Dr. McCosh their intention of giving $10,000 apiece for a gymnasium. This sum was later increased to $32,000 before the building was completed and equipped. Very appropriately the gymnasium was the first building dedicated by Doctor McCosh on January 13, 1870.

A member of the Senior class said :

"What a day that was in the old college ! Men saw not only the realization of their long-cherished desires, but they saw also in this building the promise of a healthful and steady forward movement in the work of putting the College far to the front along every line of improvement."

At 11 A.M. the visitors, professors, and students assembled at the First Presbyterian Church. Dr. McCosh was appointed chairman of the day. He introduced Dr. Willard Parker, who lectured for an hour and a half on the subject most pertinent to the day, "Physical Culture." Dr. Parker's lecture was a masterpiece of instruction and interest. Dr. McCosh presented Dr. Maclean, Ex-President of the College, after the conclusion of Dr. Parker's lecture. Dr. Maclean made but a brief remark, and that was that all should treasure what Dr. Parker had said. After music by the Newark band the meeting adjourned till 2 P.M., when a procession was formed of professors, students, and guests, all wearing college badges.

In the afternoon the procession made a circuit of the principal streets and thence passed into the new gymnasium, Nassau Hall. Dr. McCosh again took the chair, and made the following address :

"My statement is to be simply explanatory. The highest object of our meeting this day is to show our gratitude to our friends.

The public have nobly rallied round our college at this juncture. Parents and guardians have committed three hundred and thirty fine youths to our care. Our entrance class this year is one hundred and twenty-five, the largest in the history of the college. Friends have generously placed funds at our disposal to enable us to carry on our work. I shall not dwell on the sums contributed at earlier date, such as the $60,000 expended by General Halsted in erecting an observatory, and the $70,000 subscribed to endow the office and furnish the house of the President. These sums have all been publicly intimated before. But you will allow me a few minutes to specify the gift which we have received during the past year and a quarter. I must always feel a special pride in the first contribution to the college after my arrival in this country. In my inaugural lecture I uttered a few sentences on the benefit and importance of physical culture, and this was met by a hearty cheer from the students. I ventured for the moment to become a prophet, and declared that that expression of feeling would bring with it a fulfilment.

"There was present a gentleman, at that time personally known to me, with a warm Irish heart burning in his bosom, which could not resist the appeal made, and, as he always executes what he intends, he at once intimated his willingness to give $10,000 to assist in building a gymnasium for strengthening the bodily frame and promoting the health of the students of this college. There was another gentleman present with a fine academic taste, cherished in the bustle of a business life, and with a heart equally capable of being moved by generous impulses, and he engaged to give a like sum. It was a large sum to give for a gymnasium, $20,000 ; but the gentlemen meant to do a handsome deed to the students, and without any one urging them they enlarged their gift, and have erected a structure which, with the ground on which it stands, has cost $38,000. The edifice, which does such credit to the fine taste of the eminent architect and the energy of the contractor, is worthy of the price which has been paid for it ; and as you see it here to-day on its beautiful site, it is, externally and internally, the finest gymnasium in the United States—I believe it is the finest in the world. Moved by such an example, the friends of the college began to bestir themselves all over the country. Alumni associations were formed in many of the important cities, and graduates showed how deep their affection was for their alma mater. Philadelphia has sent us $10,000 for important ends chosen by itself, and holds out that this may only be the beginning of its contributions. Four gentlemen in New York have given us $4,000 to help endow the Chair of Modern Languages, to which a number of gentlemen, scattered chiefly through New Jersey, have added $2,000. It is very pleasant to find that the family of a late professor in this college have contributed $30,000 to endow a Chair of Mathematics to be called after their father.

"A new kind of gift has begun to flow in upon us. A set of energetic young men, constituting the class of '59, has raised and paid $2,000 to provide a prize for eminence in composition and English literature. An eminent judge, a citizen of our own, who has so beautiful a place in this neighborhood, which he does not keep to himself, but allows the public to enjoy, has initiated a method of promoting higher learning in our institution, which will extend in this college and extend to other colleges till the American colleges become as famous for their scholarship as any other colleges in the world.

"It is interesting to me to find that Judge Field, in endowing our first new fellowship, chose as his department, not the practical, 'bread-and-butter' branches, which have a sufficient remuneration in the money they bring, but classical learning, whose higher reward is the refinement and culture which it produces and fosters. Catching the spirit abroad, the class of '60 purposes to surpass the class of '50, and has published its intention to raise $10,000 for the endowment of another Fellowship. I have yet to refer to another magnificent donation. We owe it quite as much to the dead as to the living. The living have bestowed it, but in memory of the departed. In this neighborhood there lived a mother who shunned publicity, who never courted fame, but whose name notwithstanding will go down through all ages in connection with this college. That mother reared sons who are bent on showing that under God they owe to her the great eminence they have reached, and the high and honorable character they have maintained. One of that lady's sons has by a judicious gift enabled us to keep open this past year our library every day for the good of the students, and has devoted a sum to enable us at the close of the year to reward and encourage the student who stands highest in mental philosophy. Another son has bestowed the largest gift which this college has ever received. In addition to $100,000 contributed two years ago, Mr. John C. Green has gifted to us another $50,000 a few weeks ago, making in all $150,000. You know what a part of it is to be devoted to, for you see it in the noble new recitation rooms which rise up on our grounds, the finest, I believe, in America; and the rest of the money is allotted to the purchase of books and the permanent good of the college buildings and the college. The whole gift is to be called in memory of that mother, the Elizabeth Foundation.

"There will be other means and opportunities of showing our gratitude to some of these benefactors. There are other names that I should wish to mention, but I must forbear. Only I must refer to two gentlemen who have ever been ready to aid us by their active and disinterested exertions with their purse and their wise counsel. No one but myself knows what Mr. M. Alexander and Mr. John A. Stewart have done for our college during the last year. I feel that without them we could not have done half of what has been done. But I must turn for a very brief space to the more special end of our meeting. We dedicate this building under God to the benefit of the students now present and the students of all future times, for the promotion of their health and physical culture. Certain regulations will be laid down in regard to the use of the building to prevent confusion and enable all to profit by the exercises. These have been founded on those which have stood the test of experience in Amherst and other colleges, and they may be amended from time to time. We will require all the students, except those who may be excused by the Faculty at the request of their parents, to exercise two half-hours a week in this gymnasium at the lighter exercises; and those who wish it will be asked and encouraged to take two other half-hours at heavier work, and students will be allowed to come here at other hours not being recitation or study hours. The Hall will be under the management and control of Mr. Goldie, the experienced gymnast, who has been chosen as superintendent. When we look at this edifice, I am sure we must feel a pride in keeping up its beauty, and so we must part with all these customs, derived, I suppose, through our British forefathers—from the Goths and Vandals—of cutting, carving, and blackening what need no such barbarous ornaments.

"We should all feel ashamed of ourselves if our generous friends were to come down to us at Commencement, or any other time, and find this beautiful building defaced. But our present duty is to show our appreciation of the great kindness we have received from Mr. Bonner and Mr. Marquand. All who know him, love Mr. Bonner for his noble and generous heart, ever going forth in deeds of kindness, many of which the world will never know. I have been led in my intercourse with him to cherish the deepest regard for Mr. Marquand, for his refinement of mind and cultivated literary tastes cherished in the midst of a busy mercantile life. His interest in this college arises from the circumstance that he looks upon it as fitted to promote the intelligence and culture of the country. At our invitation they have favored us with their presence to-day, and the students who cheered the very proposal to have a gymnasium will give forth a double cheer to the two liberal friends who have gratified their wishes to an extent which they never contemplated."

David R. Sessions, '70, of South Carolina, then thanked Messrs. Bonner and Marquand, in the students' name, for their donation to the University. Applicable and pithy remarks were made by Mr. Dunn, Mr. Marquand, Chancellor George A. Green, and others. All present had somewhat impatiently waited to hear Mr. Robert Bonner. After music and gymnastic exercises by Professor Goldie, Mr. Bonner was introduced amid the rousing cheers of the students. When the enthusiasm subsided Mr. Bonner spoke laconically as follows:

"Gentlemen: When I came here I did not expect to be called upon for a speech, therefore I am not prepared to speak. Yet, to say a few words, this very want of preparation reminds me of the necessity of preparation for yourselves, in body as well as in mind, so that you may come off victorious in your future struggles through life. Oh, let me urge you to save your future hearers that tedium, that weariness, of listening to you when unprepared. But having prepared yourselves, if there is anything at all in you, you will always be able to speak briefly and to the point. And let me give you one piece of advice further. Leave off when you are done, as I will now do with thanks for your attention."

The building, thus dedicated, is of gray stone, with a high-peaked roof and towers rising from the ground at either end. The towers afford two entrances; one for visitors, leading by a winding staircase to the main floor and ladies' gallery; the other for students, leading through their dressing-room to the gymnasium proper. The first floor contained a lavatory, bath-rooms, and six bowling alleys. In January, 1875, one of these alleys was removed to make room for four billiard tables, presented to the college by Mr. P. R. Pyne of New York. The introduction of bowling and billiards was looked upon with distrust by some of the college authorities, as only a few years previous their existence in Princeton was prohibited by law. The second floor contains the gymnasium proper, the students' dressing-room, and a small room for the instructors' private use. The gymnasium is a room of fifty by eighty feet, lighted by a series of elevated windows and by gas, heated by hot-air furnaces, and suitably equipped with apparatus. Here are parallel, horizontal and rack bars, double and traveling rings, single, double and flying trapeze, inclined and horizontal ladders, rowing and chest weights, spring and battoute boards, peg-pole, chest poles, Indian clubs, dumb-bells and climbing ropes.

The gymnasium was put in the charge of Mr. George Goldie, a most experienced and efficient man, who quickly won his place in the regard of the students not only by his skill as a gymnast but by his genial and kind-hearted ways. Mr. Goldie is a Scotchman who began to teach gymnastics in New York and Montreal in 1860, and came to Princeton in 1870. He remained as superintendent of the gymnasium until 1885, when for eight years he was Director of Athletics for the New York Athletic Club. In 1893 he returned to Princeton as director of the gymnasium, which position he still holds.

The new gymnasium aroused the deepest interest throughout the college. Men began to exercise whose most athletic achievement in their whole course had been a walk around the triangle. It is true this was in part compulsory, for a classification was immediately made of the entire college and certain work was required of all. All students were required to exercise two half-hours a week at the lighter exercises, and those who wished were allowed and encouraged to take two other half-hours at heavier work. Others were permitted to exercise at other hours not conflicting with studies. The roll was called with each class, and absences counted in the general averages as from any other class hour. The benefits of the exercise were at once apparent in the physical condition of the men. In addition to this, new zest was given to outdoor sport. With the coming of spring, throwing the hammer, putting the shot, pole vaulting, sprinting, jumping, etc., etc., were added to the list of exercises heretofore known in the college; and thus began the athletic awakening which as the years have grown has added so much to the prestige of Princeton.

As the year advanced and students were becoming more proficient in the use of the gymnasium, it was announced that Mrs. John R. Thomson of Princeton proposed the establishment of a gymnastic contest about Commencement time, open to the Senior class, and that she would donate a handsome gold ring with amethyst setting to the best all-around gymnast. This was afterward enlarged by her by the gift of a medal for light-weight or fancy and heavy-weight gymnasts respectively.

This stirred anew the ardor of certain men of the Senior class, and Oliphant, Caldwell, and J. Kelly especially worked "overtime," often missing their meals that they might get a better chance at the coveted prizes. The eventful day came, the first in the list of contests to be held in that gymnasium.

The town had been placarded with the announcement that "the contest for the $200 prize ring" would take place in the gymnasium, Saturday, June 18, 1870. The building was crowded both in gallery and on the floor, and after the contest the New York judges, athletic friends of George Goldie, decided in favor of John L. Caldwell for the ring as the best all-round athlete; Joseph T. Kelly, light-weight medal; Charles J. Packer, heavy-weight medal.

Dr. McCosh and Mrs. Thomson both made addresses, the latter in awarding the prizes, and the affair was over.

The programme included the parallel bars, ladders and peg-pole, heavy dumb-bells, Indian clubs, flying and still rings, battoute, leaping, horizontal bar, rack bars, double trapeze, tumbling, and pyramids.

A graduate of the time has written the following account of the gymnasium which we quote in full from The Princeton Book.

"Let us enter the gymnasium on a winter's day at noon. Before we ascend, a noise like the rumbling of thunder, combined with the din of human voices, draws us to the bowling alley. We see first the heavy balls sent rolling to the other end of the building, where little boys are busily engaged in setting up the pins and returning the balls. Beyond, the University nine are practising for the coming spring. A target of heavy sail-cloth has been erected, at which the ball is pitched or thrown with as much accuracy and energy as though the defeat of an opposing nine were depending on its safe arrival at the bull's eye. Farther on might have been seen, before their removal, the four billiard tables, all in use, and the surrounding benches occupied with spectators eagerly awaiting their turn. We cannot delay here; we press on, ascending two flights of stairs, till we reach the gallery. There, arranged in line, is the boat crew swinging in graceful form and feathering their mimic oars, while beside them stands the captain directing their movements and correcting their errors. As we look down upon the gymnasium our eye lights upon Mr. Goldie. With Indian clubs in hand he takes his accustomed position upon the spring-board. Before him is a class. 'One! two! three! four! five! six! seven! eight!' shouts Mr. Goldie, as he swings his clubs in the first of his complex motions. The exercise is evidently a new one. Clubs are swinging in every direction except the right one, and the class are obliged to 'begin again.' With what relief do they place their clubs upon the floor when the order is given, 'Rest!' Before long the motion is mastered, the exercise is over, and each applies himself to his favorite apparatus, stopping only for an occasional glance at the visitors in the gallery. The movable horizontal bar is now brought to the centre of the room, or the battoute board and mattresses put into position, and Senior gymnasts practise giant swings or somersaults for the coming contest.

"By this time the crew have finished rowing and have gone downstairs for a run. When they have started one student after another falls unto line until the gymnasium is encircled by a moving ring. Then the ring breaks, winding around posts and across the floor in the form of a serpent. This exercise is continued till all are wearied, and soon visitors and students have dispersed for dinner."

In December the gymnasium was slightly remodelled. The large gallery and the dressing-rooms were removed from the main floor and part of the first floor equipped as dressing-rooms with several hundred lockers. The bath-rooms were placed in their present position against the west wall, leaving room for the bowling and pitching alleys.

There was no annual gymnastic exhibition in the spring of 1880 because of the terrible scourge of typhoid malarial fever from sewer-gas poisoning, resulting in eight deaths and two hundred cases. The exercises of Commencement were shortened and the college closed as soon as possible.

The interest in the gymnasium had been steadily decreasing, for there was no money to keep it in proper repair. In 1882, for instance, the entire appropriation for this purpose did not exceed $50. As early as 1883 the complaint arose that the building was overcrowded, and yet the Faculty and Trustees were earnestly considering whether gymnastic exercise should be made compulsory upon the two lower classes. This was neglected, however, when Mr. George Goldie felt compelled to accept a more lucrative position as director of athletics for the New York Athletic Club. His departure left the team without a support, and after an exhibition at Pottstown and the annual contest, they neglected practice, and no exhibition was given in 1885. Hereafter there are no contests, only exhibitions. In the fall of 1885 the Freshmen were compelled to spend three hours of every week in the gymnasium, and I. P. Withington, '80, was appointed director to supervise their exercise. This compulsory exercise had to be abandoned in less than a year.

In the fall of 1886 Mr. Isaac J. Turner was appointed superintendent of the gymnasium, remaining until 1893. Under his influence the men interested in gymnastics organized the Princeton College Gymnastic Association. It began with fourteen members, and its purpose was to promote the general interest of gymnastics in college, both in furnishing a greater incentive to the present members to work and in drawing out new material. The qualifications for membership were a moderate amount of gymnastic ability and a little steady work.

Its influence, however, was not felt at once, for the teams gave no exhibition in 1887, because they had no suits. In 1886 the members, with the assistance of M. T. Pyne, '77, had supplied their own uniforms, but in 1887 the members could not raise the necessary one hundred dollars. The annual exhibition was abandoned because the Commencement committee would not make any contribution, or allow the team to charge admission to the exhibition.

The Association was reorganized on the plan of the Baseball, Football, and Track Association, with the following officers:

H. S. Thompson, '94, Manager.
C. S. Hughes, '93, Captain.
Mr. I. J. Turner, Director.

The team received permission to take a spring tour, exhibiting in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, but the expenses were so heavy that the year closed with a deficit of $300. No exhibition was given in June because the dance committee was compelled to use the gymnasium for the Sophomore Reception.

ROWING AT PRINCETON.

Yale and Harvard had been rowing for seventeen years before this sport was introduced into Princeton in 1870. Yet as early as May, 1860, in the exclusive columns of the Nassau Lit. we find a long lament upon the fact that Princeton had no share in the college sport of rowing. This article may be the individual effort of the distressed editor to fill his columns, or an attempt to force a sport on the college, as the Princetonian attempted to force the revival of rowing in 1891; but probably it was called forth by a discussion at the time among the students. The editor writes:

"Princeton must overcome obstacles, before she can boast of her navy. But we feel confident that they are not so formidable in reality as in appearance. If Bristed's description of English University life is to be relied upon, the inference is a safe one that Cambridge, whose rowers are the champions of England, has, in her diminutive Cam, a far less available stream than our Delaware and Raritan Canal. We are fully persuaded that, could the consent of the company be once obtained, and especially the favor of the 'powers that be,' a reasonable share of the energy which is now expended in defining Squatter Sovereignty, or guarding intact the prerogatives of Junior Oratorship, would soon set afloat a navy worthy of Princeton, past and present. The exercise itself is a most manly one, and exerts a strong influence against dissipation, since it is a matter of experience that boating and spreeing are, physically at least, incompatible. For our own sake, we confess with regret that it is too late for the class of '60 to undertake the matter. They have let their opportunity go by. But for the sake of the college, we hope that it will not longer suffer delay, and recommend the men of '61 to take it up with Class spirit and enterprise. May prosperity crown their efforts and those of their successors."

But the aspirations of the editor were not to be realized. The momentous crisis of the Civil War threw the quiet ranks of students into confusion. Compositions were neglected for commissions; the dust gathered on the Latin text books while their owners were polishing swords on the banks of the Potomac. To be sure, a small number of students remained at college, but it is not surprising that they neglected rowing, which has always been an artificial sport at Princeton, for baseball and the quieter game of cricket.

For ten years rowing, even as a topic of conversation, seemed to have disappeared. But in January, 1870, a successful effort was made to organize a crew in Princeton. The beginning was indeed modest. One evening eight of the athletes of the college gathered in West College and when their host announced that the motive for the meeting was to discuss the possibility of organizing a navy in Princeton, he was met with a general laugh. Three of the men withdrew at once in disgust, but five remained and decided to make the experiment. Uniting their purses, as well as their purposes, these men bought from the Yale Navy what was then called two "six-oared gigs;"

"but the name was a misnomer, as the boats were respectable imitations of Noah's Ark, and about as appropriate, in which they could learn nothing but a vitiated style, that would require thorough change before the beginners could be formed in the right mould. The history of one of these boats is a short one. It was launched on the canal and manned by six enthusiastic oarsmen, who, after one hundred yards of the most ridiculous exhibition of rowing, were compelled to swim ashore, the leaky old craft having filled and gone to the bottom. This accident brought down the ridicule of the whole college upon the leaders.

"But they were not to be cast down, nor for one instant did they abandon the undertaking. On the contrary, they persevered all the more, and the second boat proving to be a little better than the old coffin that went under, the crew in a short time learned to feather an oar quite well, sit in a boat fairly, and judiciously expend their strength on the stroke. All this time, be it remembered, the students had their athletic games, and in order to make the coveted creditable exhibition in these, they were obliged to do considerable training in the Gym. The good time that they had in running and leaping gave them a muscular development, which fitted them later for a place in the boat."

This practice led to the organization of the Princeton College Boating Club; with the following officers:

C. W. Kase, '72, President,
S. E. Ewing, '72, Treasurer,
A. Devereux, '72, Secretary,
H. W. Guernsey, '72, Captain, and the following men from the class of '72 were members: A. H. McClintock, B. Stockton, L. W. Jewell, D. M. Hazlett, A. Johnson, F. M. Taylor, and W. H. Pearson.

Meantime, in the fall of 1870 the Class of '74 organized a class crew, which their historian calls "that miserable affair in Fresh Year, of which everyone was captain and in which Bradford pulled stroke and Gordon bow. Gordon was the worst bow oar you can imagine; he invariably ran into a bank every hundred rods, or hit his head on a bridge, and rudely expletived against both banks and bridges. They would always find the railroad bridge swung back, the boat house within the aggravating distance of fifty feet, and no way of getting at it except by walking a quarter of a mile to one of the other bridges; and, after arriving at that point, they were always sure to find that bridge unswung and the fellow at supper, from which repast he would not rise until he had finished; or just as they would come down the Canal Street road their eyes would be gladdened by the sight of about sixty canal boats, numerous schooners, and a sprinkling of tugs all passing that point—and they were obliged to wait. When they would get to the boat house and bring the boat out, they would pretty nearly upset getting in; and when the word was given to trim boat, I have seen them all go to one side of the boat, and thereby disturb the equanimity of all on board.

"In addition to these obstacles and discomforts no one at the canal knew them, no bridge keepers would swing open the bridges, and the keepers' children would shamefully maltreat them. I have known little urchins to get on the bridges, and, while the boys were pushing under, all lying flat on their backs to avoid striking their heads, the ragamuffins would drop sand and fine gravel down into their faces."

Yet despite the jokes, the canal was not such a bad place for a crew to learn to row; as one Lit. editor said: "the crew is never deterred from their daily practice by tide or wind. As for passing canal boats that proved good practice for the bow"—at this time there was no coxswain, and the steering was managed by the foot gear of the bow-oarsman.

their physical standard and advance in the art of rowing. all the time arousing the interest of the College in the sport by their persistent energy and spirit. In the spring of 1872, the leaders felt that in their practice they were sufficiently developed to row in public, and obtaining the coöperation of their fellow students, they purchased a handsome four-oared shell from Watson, Balch and Company. The final crew was selected and entered in the Schuylkill Navy Regatta, then open to all amateurs. Then the crew went faithfully to work. They had begun to train early in the spring and rowed twice a day during the months of April and May. Considering the fact that they had no one to coach them, the crew surpassed even the most sanguine expectations of their friends. Princeton's first boat race came off on June 6, 1872, between the six-oared crew of '74 and the 'Varsity four-oared. The latter allowed the Sophomores one minute on the mile, and notwithstanding this advantage, the 'Varsity was beaten only by fifteen seconds, finishing in seven minutes.

Soon after this the 'Varsity crew went to Philadelphia. The Press says :

"So quietly did they arrive at Philadelphia, so young were the men and so slight seemed their chances of success, that they were not taken into account at all by the 'bookmakers.' The crew did so well and showed so much pluck that 'Josh' Ward gave them unstinted praise for the form in which they presented themselves and the manner in which they pulled to the finish. To be sure they came in only fourth, but a close fourth in an entry list of seven that included some of the best amateur crews in America."

NATIONAL AMATEUR REGATTA.

SCHUYLKILL COURSE, PHILADELPHIA, JUNE 13, 1872.

Four-oared Race—One mile and a half.

- 1st—Couper of Savannah. Time 9 min. and 5 sec.
  - 2d—Quaker City.
  - 3d—Nassau of New York.
  - 4th—Princeton.
- Vesper.
Gulick.
Neptune of New Brighton.

The Princeton crew:

- Stroke—H. B. Burt, '73, Captain, weight 154 lbs.
- No. 2—W. M. Smith, '74, weight 136 lbs.
- No. 3—A. Williams, '72, weight 135 lbs.
- No. 4—A. Devereux, Jr., '72, weight 133 lbs.

Yet this defeat proved to be the stepping stone to future progress. The Club was reorganized on a broader policy, more than sixty members joining; new boats were purchased and "rowing was firmly established as one of the sports of Princeton and many of the older games were thrown aside as quite humbugs in comparison." The following were the officers:

- J. R. Adams, '73, President.
- D. T. Marvel, '73, Vice-President.
- W. H. Blinn, '75, Secretary.
- J. P. K. Bryan, '73, Treasurer.

- A. Pell, '73, Commodore.
- D. Nicoll, '74, Vice-Commodore.
- A. Marquand, '74, Director.

But in the spring, the interest of the students was centered in the baseball nine, which had just returned from a successful tour. In June, 1873, there was no trace of a 'Varsity crew and Lit. says: "'74 is the only class whose crew rows regularly at five in the morning." In November, 1873, the Lit. again discussed the problem whether Princeton can hope ever to be a "Boating College." However, one thing was encouraging; namely, that Amherst had won the intercollegiate race in 1872, and in face of greater difficulties than confront the Princeton men; for the Amherst crew had to walk four miles to reach their practice course.

An enthusiastic meeting was held and seventy names added to the list of members, with the following officers:

- W. H. Sponsler, '74, President.
- C. Scribner, '75, Vice-President.
- W. M. Smith, '74, Commodore.
- J. M. Taylor, '76, Vice-Commodore.
- A. Marquand, '74, Director.
- H. G. Denison, '75, Treasurer.
- J. Conger, '76, Secretary.

Formerly the privilege of membership had been sold for a small pecuniary consideration, but now the Club threw open its doors to the College, and by its comprehensive embrace, it hoped to elicit general hearty sympathy and generous support by voluntary subscriptions. A committee was appointed to solicit funds for the erection of a new Boat House. They planned to send out a thousand postal cards to the graduates, friends, and patrons of the College, stating the needs of the Club and asking for subscriptions. But in consequence of the tightened money market throughout the country, the project was indefinitely postponed.

This did not, however, prevent another energetic committee from making estimates, inspecting sites, and arranging the preliminaries relative to the erection of the prospective Boat House. The house, that they had been using, was an old wagon shed, and though the journey to and fro from the canal was up and down a precipitous hill, the awkward and clumsy old craft they then owned, was daily carried on their backs to the course. The committee chose an admirable site on the south bank of the canal just below the first bridge east of the railroad, about ten minutes from the college, where there would be no difficulty in crossing the canal, the bridge keeper would act as a watchman, and the crews, if rowing toward Kingston, would avoid one low bridge.

The Club received a very cordial invitation from the Yale Navy to attend their Annual Fall Regatta, but Princeton was compelled to decline.

However, there were some changes going on at home. The year had opened with the following officers:

- A. Marquand, '74, President.
- F. Biddle, '75, Vice-President.
- F. A. Marquand, '76, Secretary.
- W. A. Butler, Jr., '76, Treasurer.
- W. M. Smith, '74, Commodore.

But in February, the offices of Commodore, Vice-Commodore, and Director were abandoned as superfluous, because they rendered the administration too complex and diffusive. J. M. Taylor, '76, was elected Vice-President in the vacancy of F. Biddle, '75. The Executive Committee composed of the President, Vice-President, and Mr. George Goldie, decided to send A. Marquand, '74, and D. Nicoll, '74, as delegates to the annual Convention of the Rowing Association of American Colleges at Hartford, Conn., on January 21, 1874. The members of this Association were Amherst, Bowdoin, Columbia, Cornell, Dartmouth, Harvard, Massachusetts Agricultural, Trinity, Williams and Yale. Wesleyan and Princeton were admitted, despite the objection of Amherst that "a line must be drawn somewhere. If every college that applied were admitted it would be impossible to get a sheet of water to row on."

Among other business the following rules of eligibility was passed, Princeton voting in the affirmative:

"Undergraduate students, students of colleges, members of the Association, candidates for the degree of A.B., Ph.B., or such other degrees as represent a parallel or similar course of study, with the exception of those who are candidates for the degree of LL.B., M.D., or B.D., shall be eligible to the Regatta crews of this Association. It shall be understood that the term undergraduate shall mean all students, candidates for such degrees as mentioned above with the above exceptions, but who shall not yet have received any degree."

It was also decided, Princeton voting in the affirmative, to hold the Regatta on July 16, over the Saratoga course, which was shown to be much superior to that of Troy or New London. There was great opposition to this course because Saratoga was then the sporting, racing and betting centre of the whole country, and it was said that the Association would fall into disrepute, if it went there and submitted itself to this contaminating influence. It was rumored also that the Trustees of Princeton would not allow their crew to go to Saratoga, but this question was never brought up for official discussion, nor was any official action taken, because at this time the control of the Trustees and the Faculty over college sports was not so well defined as at present, and probably the whole Board felt like that member who said: "Go ahead, boys, but keep quiet. The race will not take place until after Commencement and then you are your own masters."

The admission of Princeton into this Association had the beneficial effect of arousing the students to renewed efforts to build their Boat House. The postponed appeal was made to the graduates and patrons, and the response was both generous and immediate; the largest contributor was Mr. Robert Bonner, who gave at one time $2,000, and again $800.

The plans for the House were designed and presented to the Club by Mr. Robertson of New York. The House was, and in fact still is, seventy feet long by thirty feet broad, fitted with boxes, wash basins and all the conveniences for oarsmen; it is capable of holding twenty shells. This House was formally opened on May 17, 1874, the day of the Annual Gymnastic contest. Mr. Allan Marquand, '74, President P. C. B. C. presided and introduced Mr. Harris, who spoke briefly of college athletic sports and of boating in particular. He was followed by W. A. Butler, Jr., '76, who read a somewhat humorous address on the boating affairs of the college. Then Dr. McCosh closed the exercises with a few pertinent remarks. At the time "no college crew had a more commodious, better equipped and appropriate boat house than this." During the spring of 1874, it contained one six-oared paper shell, 49 feet by 19 inches; one four-oared shell, 43 feet by 34 inches; a new barge by Fearon of Yonkers, for practising; and single shells owned by individual members. For the races of the season, both the 'Varsity and the Freshmen crews purchased new shells from Fearon; length 49 feet, width 20 inches; depth amidships 8 inches; at bow 6¾ inches; at stern 4¾ inches; weight 135 lbs., and built of Spanish cedar.

The crew began to train in the Gym in March, and the eighteen candidates were soon weeded down to ten, and then again to eight. They were required to row five or six miles each evening, at the rate of thirty strokes per minute. Their diet was very severe, nor was it relieved like that of Yale and Harvard, with ale and other tonics.

On June 25, when the 'Varsity and Freshman crews went to Saratoga, the following estimate of their expenses was announced:

|---|----------|
| Railroad fare and freight, . . . . .            | $60 00  |
| Board for eight men at $10 per week, . . . . . | 280 00   |
| Boat, . . . . .                                 | 325 90   |
| Sundries, . . . . .                             | 100 00   |
|   | $765 00 |

Of this the students contributed $415 and the Alumni were relied upon to furnish the remaining $350.

The quarters of the crews were at "John Riley's." Not much was expected of either of the crews of Princeton. In fact, the gossip was not whether Princeton would win, but whether she would defeat Trinity or Williams for the last place, because of her light appearance, brief experience, numerous faults in practice, and the time of her trial spins.

The first race was the Freshman Race, at 5 o'clock on Wednesday, July 15, 1874. There were only three entries, Yale, Brown and Princeton.

"When the starter asked if the crews were ready, Princeton, who had not gotten into proper position, quickly replied 'No.' But the officer, not hearing, or disregarding the answer, gave the signal immediately. This took the Princeton men by surprise and they were thrown into temporary confusion. They were the last to catch the water and even when they did their boat was headed in the wrong direction. However Yale fell behind on 30½ strokes per minute while Brown was forging ahead at 37, with Princeton rowing 33. Half a mile out, Yale drew level and a mile later was slightly ahead of Princeton and considerably in advance of Brown. Half a mile from the finish they were in the same relative positions, but Yale was steering very wildly and as she drew near home, she suddenly slackened as if tired. Princeton put on a magnificent spurt and drew ahead, leaving Brown four seconds behind. The judges' boat was awkwardly placed near the flag at one end of the finish line. Because Princeton passed between the boat and the flag, Yale wanted Princeton ruled out, on the ground that Princeton should have gone on the other side of the boat. But the judges failed to approve of this demand. Princeton had won the first intercollegiate race that she ever entered!"

This is the only real victory that Princeton ever won in an intercollegiate boat race, and even it was disputed. The only other alleged victory is that of the Fourteenth Intercollegiate Regatta Challenge Cup, in 1881, which was won by a breach of the agreement on the part of the opponents.

It was in this Freshman Race that Princeton first used orange and black as college colors. Long before, at the inauguration of President McCosh, in 1868 (see page 25), orange ribbon had been worn, and words were printed on it in the common black printer's ink, but this combination was accidental, and the two colors were never associated, at least in the undergraduate mind. But from this time on there was a change. It came about in this way.

The summer before he entered College, W. Libbey, '77, now the well-known Professor of Physical Geography, Explorer, Lecturer, etc., had been abroad, and while in Cambridge he saw in a window a large placard "The Duke of Nassau's Colors," and surrounding this a lot of ribbon of half width stripes of yellow and black. Mr. Libbey bought several yards of this and some time after he entered college he remarked to his classmate, M. W. Jacobus, that these colors would be appropriate for Princeton, even better than the orange, which had been used before, but not generally. Jacobus dared him to wear a necktie of these colors. And luckily, as later events proved, he did. Some weeks later, Rutgers College was endeavoring to adopt colors and desired orange and black. But a rumor had reached them that these colors belonged to Princeton and had been worn there. Accordingly a committee was sent to Princeton to investigate. They found abundant evidence that these colors had been worn, but could obtain no particulars about the men who wore it, or when, or how long. This was enough, however, to send them home disappointed. So the Orange and Black had been saved for the Tiger and Princeton, by a dare and a necktie.

When his class decided to send a crew to Saratoga, Mr. Libbey thought it would be a good plan to present them with these colors. But he found it impossible to purchase here in America any ribbon striped in two colors. Fortunately, through the business interests of his father, he was able to order one thousand yards of orange and black ribbon from a Paterson silk mill. He did not duplicate the Cambridge specimen, but ordered a deep orange color, thinking this more effective than the lighter yellow. When the ribbon came, he gave the crew and officials pieces of it for hat bands, etc., and sent the remainder to a store in the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga to be sold as "Princeton's colors." Very little of it, however, was sold before the race. The lake, where the races were rowed, is three miles from the hotel, and when Princeton had won the Freshmen Race, the Class of '77 commissioned one of their members, who happened to be present, with a very fast trotting horse, to hasten to the hotel and buy up all the ribbon. He hastened—but bought no ribbon. Every inch had been sold. From this time on the Orange and Black have remained the colors of Princeton. In the spring of 1896, they were adopted by the Trustees as the official colors for the trimmings of the Academic Gowns; despite the strong plea that was made in The Princeton Bulletin, that buff and blue, and not orange and black, were the true colors of the House of Nassau. There was too strong a sentiment among the alumni that "It matters not whether we got them by accident or design. We have them, and will never change them, so long as eye and voice can unite in praise of dear old Princeton and the Orange and the Black."

So much for the colors. To return to the races. Princeton felt very proud of her Freshman crew, but still prouder were the Class of '77. Their gratitude found expression the following June, when each member of the crew received a loving cup in commemoration of their part in this victory. The presentation took place in the Gymnasium

"which was filled with seats, and a platform had been arranged at the east end, in the rear of which were the oars used by the crew, adorned with ribbons, and the colors worn by them, consisting of a blue banner appropriately inscribed and a national flag with the names of the oarsmen on the white stripes. From one of the beams overhead hung the boat. The cups were valued at $50 each, of satin finished silver, lined with gold, 10½ inches high, with a pair of crossed oars about six inches long, tied with a wreath; the captain's cup had in addition a solid figure three inches high, bearing a wreath in either hand."

The 'Varsity Race was postponed, on account of rough water and weather, from Thursday to Friday, and again to Saturday. The splendid victory of the light Freshman crew inspired the 'Varsity men. But the race was a fine victory for Columbia. Yale and Harvard fouled each other and Princeton brought up the rear. As regards Princeton's defeat, the less said the better. Some of the critics at College said that certain members of the crew were ignorantly or partially chosen, and that the best talent of the College had not been given a chance. The real facts of the case seem to be as follows:

"The quarters which had been prepared for the crew were very uncomfortable, besides being inconvenient to the course. The food, which they ate, was little adapted to rigid training. They had no experienced trainer. The boat, in which they practiced, was an inferior one. Yet they worked on each day, without faltering, manfully struggling against these serious drawbacks. On the day first appointed for the race, they rowed themselves from their quarters to the starting point, a distance of almost two miles; just as they were nearing the Columbia slip, their boat sank on account of the roughness of the water. Several of them were thoroughly drenched and the next morning they had developed severe colds. But notwithstanding this, they were all ready and anxious to row at the appointed hour. Finally when the race did occur they were compelled to row in the Freshman boat."

In the fall, there was very little gossip about the crews, but a good deal of solid work was done in training. The Freshman Class, anxious to uphold the record of '77, organized a crew. On November 7, they held a race with the Class of '77 from the Aqueduct to the Railroad Bridge, but the '77 crew finished several lengths ahead. These class races served the two purposes of bringing forward and maturing future oarsmen, and of affording the whole student body an opportunity to see what was being accomplished and granting it a guarantee for the capital invested.

The officers for the season of '75 were

- A. Alexander, '75, President.
- B. Hall, '75, Vice-President.
- F. H. Markoe, '76, Secretary.
- W. A. Butler, Jr., '76, Treasurer.
- B. Nicoll, '77, Captain.

They decided to spend $200 in a four-oared gig with a coxswain's seat, built by Fearon, and to send A. Alexander, '75, and B. Nicoll, '77, to Hartford, to the Annual Convention of The Rowing Association of American Colleges, in January. There the date of the annual Regatta was determined as July 14, and after due deliberation Saratoga was chosen as the place. After much discussion a motion was passed, that racing with coxswain's seat be made optional, and another motion that the course of each boat be buoyed off, the buoys being one hundred feet wide apart and one-eighth of a mile apart in parallel lines. J. C. Drayton, '73, was elected to the Regatta committee, and at the second meeting, on April 7, this committee reported that "their agreement with the Saratoga Rowing Association guarantees free transportation for boats and crews; the keeping of a man at Albany to assist crews on their way to the lake; good boat houses; comfortable quarters and good board at ten dollars a week per man; regular delivery of mail, freight and express; regular stages to run as directed by the Regatta Committee, etc."

The racing rules were slightly amended to the effect that each boat shall keep its own water throughout the race, and any boat departing from its own water shall be disqualified.

When the 'Varsity crew left college in June, 1875, they were in perfect condition. The New York Herald said:

"Every man is a perfect physical specimen, and seems to combine the greatest strength with inexhaustible health, energy, and pluck. So far as strong backs and big loins and grand muscular development goes, Princeton is not far behind any of her associates this season. Two or three are very big men—perhaps too big to work effectively in a shell—but then there is no clumsiness about them. Indomitable pluck characterizes them all, and if the combined strength of the crew can be moulded into proper shape, it will stand a good chance of winning the race. If Princeton does not gain the honors this year, their present system of training will bear fruit an hundred fold at no distant period. There seems, however, to have been a lack of coaching—the entire work depending on the stroke, Nicoll. They, however, have become conspicuous on the lake at Saratoga, for their hard work and rapid improvement. In a crew of so much strength and fire, the faults which are so easily detected, are likely to be hidden in the race. The well-known pluck and endurance of the men are likely to make very hot work for all the crews in the first half at the finish. A singular thing in considering this splendid spirit of Princeton is that it has not worked in the same way or with such happy results in the training of her Freshman crew. They came up here among the roughest in their work of any of the Freshman crews; and they have not improved to any decided extent since. A judicious sharp coaching with such material would work wonders."

The Freshman Race was rowed first, at 12 o'clock on Tuesday, July 13, 1875.

"At the start Princeton was pulling 38 strokes to the minute, Harvard 36 and Cornell 35. Princeton led by three-fourths of a length at the half mile. But at the mile post, Princeton began to splash and drop back. All along she had been doing too much arm work and had no idea of throwing her body on to the oar. She had not been left ignorant of this, but still seemed to have failed to make much improvement. She was now beginning to find that muscle alone cannot win a college race in these days and that there must be form as well. Early in the second mile, Princeton was still at her 38 stroke, and all were keeping well together. The steering was very ragged, but there was a slight excuse for this, because Fearon, the builder of their new boat, had failed to furnish it, until long after the time specified in his contract, and the crew had only had three days practice in the new boat. In the last half mile, Princeton was last, but even with her terribly wearing stroke, she was still hitting away manfully, and showing of what stuff she was made, and how her one great need was coaching. Even at the very close she was rowing 36 strokes to the minute, and when the roughness of her work is considered, it was most creditable that she was only seventeen seconds behind the winner Cornell.

"In the University Race, the Princeton crew was handicapped by a felon on Parmly's finger. At the mile station he fainted or was seized with an epileptic fit. However he kept up his stroke, but so feebly, that, by the time the second mile was reached, Nicoll, the stroke, turned and asked what was the matter. He replied very faintly, and the next moment fell over in the boat, supported by Van Lennep, until the others had rowed him to Dartmouth's House. He was then carried on a mattress to the Princeton quarters, where he soon recovered. He had been much annoyed by the felon on his little finger, and had not been able to sleep for three nights. It is singular that the man with the largest and most muscular arms and body among all the oarsmen, should first succumb to the severe strain. Princeton's chief trouble was her lack of coaching, for she had abundantly shown that she was made up of the sort of timber that knows how to learn."

The loss of these races seemed to have little influence on the Club, for in the fall, the following officers were elected:

- W. A. Butler, Jr., '76, President.
- R. W. Johnson, '76, Vice-President.
- W. Libbey, Jr., '77, Treasurer.
- S. Alexander, '79, Secretary.
- B. Nicoll, '77, Captain.

Their first work was to purchase another new four-oared shell from Fearon, and to send a challenge to the Schuylkill Navy, of Philadelphia, for a four-oared race of one and a half miles, at Philadelphia, on October 9. But this was declined, owing to the lateness of the season. Accordingly, all interest at Princeton was centered in the Bumping Races of the First Annual Fall Regatta, on the Delaware and Raritan Canal, during the last days of October. These races had been fixed for May, but for various reasons, the committee had postponed them. This postponement had changed slightly the personnel of the Regatta committee, for Mr. Charles Scribner, '75, had graduated and W. E. Dodge, '79, was elected to his place, with the remaining members, B. W. Riker, '76, J. A. Campbell, '77, and J. B. Townsend, '78.

The prize for these races was a silver cup, presented by Messrs. McCook, '73, Alexander, '76, and Drayton, '73, to be held by the winning crew until the next fall regatta; and the races were rowed under the rules for "Bumping Races," which we condense as follows:

- J. M. McFarland, '78.    E. J. Van Lennep, '78.    R. F. Karge, '78.    I. H. Hess, '78.
H. Stevenson, '78.    J. C. Thurston, '78.

"The boats shall be arranged according to the seniority of classes, with the interval of seventy feet between each boat; and there shall be one hundred and twenty feet between the finishing posts of each boat.

"A boat bumping another on one day, changes position with the boat bumped on the next day.

"A bump is when the nose of the rear boat overlaps the stern of the boat ahead.

"The boat bumping and the boat bumped shall immediately make way for any in the rear.

"A bump cannot be made after the stern of the boat to be bumped has passed its finishing post.

"There shall be a marker for each boat, whose duty it shall be to fire a pistol as the stern of his boat passes its finishing post."

On the first day, '78 bumped '77, but '77 claimed a foul, alleging that their steering gear was broken within the first ten strokes. After considerable discussion, the referee allowed the foul, declaring that '78 had made no bump under the existing circumstances, and that the boats must start on the second day in the same order. But '76 and '78 were dissatisfied with this decision, and refused to row on the second day. '77 and '79 were the only crews to start, but again the start was declared foul, because '79 broke their rudder. On the third day '78 bumped '76, but '79 was not able to bump '77. On the fourth day, '78 failed to bump '77, and the cup was handed over to Captain Nicoll.

Inasmuch as 1876 was the Centennial Celebration in Philadelphia, the Intercollegiate Association challenged the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge to an international race. Much surprise was therefore caused when, in December, Yale withdrew from the College Association, saying that the large number of entries made it impossible to secure a course large enough to be fair to all the competitors, that the Association was liable to be mismanaged, and necessitated too much publicity. Yale also urged Harvard to withdraw, in order that the merits of their own colleges might be better tested in exclusive races. The same request was extended to Columbia and Princeton. Princeton, however, declined under the extraordinary circumstances, feeling that duty, as well as courtesy, forbade the desertion of the Association during the Centennial year, and in view of the English challenge. At first Harvard was inclined to yield to Yale, and even did accept a challenge for a four-oared race with Yale; nevertheless Harvard remained in the Association in accordance with the expressed wishes of the alumni, announcing, however, that she would withdraw immediately after the July Regatta.

In this spring of 1876 two new shells were purchased by the Princeton Club; one paper boat built by Waters, of Troy; the other shell of Spanish cedar, by Fearon, of Yonkers. This latter was said to be the lightest six-oared shell ever built, weighing only 120 pounds. At the time there were twenty-one shells and gigs in the house, including eight six-oared shells; and the treasurer reported to the Club to be in prosperous financial condition.

In the spring of 1876, there were two Freshman crews. In the fall, when the organization of a Freshman crew to enter the regatta at Saratoga was taken up, there was considerable discussion as to whether first year men in the Scientific School were eligible to places in the crew. As the Scientific course was only three years, the Freshmen in the Scientific School were really members of the class of '78, while the Freshman crew in the Academic Department were '79 men. It was finally decided that, notwithstanding the Scientific men might graduate a year earlier, they were nevertheless Freshmen, and, in the final make-up of the crew which was to represent the class in the Saratoga Regatta in the spring of 1876, two of the Scientific men, C. C. Clarke, and C. D. Bennett, were given places in the boat. The other Freshman crew was composed entirely of '79 men, and represented the class in the class bumping races.

But despite the two Freshman crews, Princeton was not represented in the Intercollegiate Freshman Race in 1876; the class were unwilling to subscribe the necessary funds and the Boating Club could not afford to take two crews. There were only three entries, and they finished

The University Race was held on July 19. For the first mile Princeton held fifth place. Her form continued noticeably good, but the pace was telling. Foot by foot she began to slide back. At the last half mile Princeton was three lengths behind Wesleyan. As they drew near the last quarter Princeton spurted brilliantly and picked up, but in the next minute the reaction came and she fell back again.

In the single Scull Race Parmly maintained a stout fight for second place, but in the last mile Danforth, of Harvard, forged ahead.

In the fall of 1876 the interest in rowing decreased greatly. The three years of defeat, coupled with the expense, seemed to cool the ardor of all except a few. Still the Club continued under the following officers:

- J. S. Ely, '77, President.
- J. F. Williamson, '77, Vice-President.
- R. M. Corwine, '78, Treasurer.
- S. Alexander, '79, Secretary.
- B. Nicoll, '77, Captain.

On September 10, the Princeton four-oared crew entered the Burlington Regatta against the Falcons and the Oneidas. Princeton started with a very quick, telling stroke, and immediately took the lead. At the three-quarter mile post a man was observed standing out in the water in Princeton's course, waving his hand to the Falcons. When Princeton came along, he shook his fist at them, shouting out a curse, then threw himself bodily upon number two's oar. That immediately stopped the boat. A foul was claimed and the referee declared "it is no race."

The Second Annual Fall Regatta or Bumping Races were held on the "raging" canal on October 25. In the first heat '78 traversed the one and one-half mile course in ten minutes and forty-five seconds, crossing the finish line three minutes in advance of '80, who were delayed by a canal boat. In the second heat, '79 made the distance in eleven minutes and fifty seconds, and fifty feet behind came the crew of '77 with a disabled rudder. In the final heat, '78 crossed the line two hundred feet in advance of '79, winning the cup and the race in nine minutes and fifty-five seconds.

In the single Scull Race for the cup offered by C. C. Clarke, '78, the prize was awarded to P. Katzenbach, '79, the only competitor.

The Club was heavily in debt, and a committee consisting of Messrs. Libbey, '77, Kretsinger, '78, Pitney, '79, and Rhine, '80, was appointed to solicit subscriptions. The President, J. S. Ely, '77, resigned and Mr. F. Dunning, '77, was chosen as his successor. At the annual convention in December, Princeton was represented on the Regatta Committee by C. Scribner, '75. It was then decided that the University Race should be rowed in four-oared shells, and that the rules of eligibility should be broader, to include candidates for any degree.

Princeton was very much opposed to this, as with her Collegiate and Scientific Courses alone, it practically debarred her from all hope of success.

Because of lack of interest in rowing in the spring of '77, Captain C. C. Clarke decided that to attempt to train a crew with a worse than depleted treasury, and inferior men, would redound neither to his credit nor that of the college. The Boating Club was encumbered with a debt of $500. It seemed as if the benefits arising from rowing to the students was not at all in proportion to the cost of the sport. Very few students, probably not fifteen regularly, were willing to "walk a mile to pull an oar upon a narrow, dirty, nasty, dead canal;" while during the last three years, the sport had cost $10,000. The reasons against Princeton entering the Regatta of '77 are summed up by Captain Clarke, as follows:

"First, At present we are heavily in debt, and it would be impossible to send a crew, though one could be sent for one-third the amount expended last year. Second, The men training for a University crew should be selected early in the fall, soon after College opens, and should continue outdoor work so long as the weather will permit. This year the men were unable to commence work till January, thus losing three months of valuable time. Third, The number of boating men from whom to select a 'Varsity crew this season is small. Fourth, It is of the greatest importance that Princeton should do well in the next regatta she enters. Otherwise, there will be no interest in boating whatever."

The Third Annual Fall Regatta was held on October 13, 1877, not on the canal, but on the Delaware River, at Burlington. There were only three entries, as the class of '79 did not send a crew. The course was one mile and a half straightaway, and the class of '80 won in 7 minutes 59 seconds, with '78 a few inches, and '81 four or five lengths behind. The following crews contested:

Crew '78.—Bow—I. H. Hess.
No. 2—W. L. Geer.
No. 3—P. R. Pyne.
No. 4—C. C. Clarke.
No. 5—D. Stewart.
Stroke and Captain—H. Stevenson.

Crew '80.—Bow—W. S. Martin.
No. 2—B. Ballard.
No. 3—H. Livingood.
No. 4—G. S. Johns.
No. 5—H. M. Cutts.
Stroke and Captain—A. McLaren.

Crew '81.—Bow—C. W. Snyder.
No. 2—T. B. Bradford.
No. 3—H. McAlpin.
No. 4—H. D. Warren.
No. 5—H. McDermott.
Stroke and Captain—W. H. Roberts.

The debt had been increasing, and little was done to meet the obligation except a Glee Club concert in November, 1877, but this yielded only $80. Graduates and undergraduates alike refused to give money toward "a Club which is dead and with no prospect of coming to life again." Then the committee in charge tried to raise some money by selling the boats, but this attempt was unsuccessful.

When college opened in the fall of 1878, the following officers began their duties:

President, F. Larkin, '79.
Treasurer, G. Blair, '80.
Secretary, C. A. Munn, '81.

The debt now amounted to $441; about $100 was due to different tradesmen and manufacturers of boating materials. For the remaining $371, Fearon brought suit against the Club, and the suit going by default to the plaintiff, Mr. Elmer E. Green, of Trenton, most generously relieved the Association of its embarrassment by advancing the sum, to be repaid at its convenience, without interest. Little by little the money was collected, until in the spring of 1879, the debt was nearly liquidated, so nearly so at least, that there was a great deal of talk of entering a crew in the Newark Regatta.

Just at this time, the University of Pennsylvania challenged Princeton and Columbia to row for the Childs Challenge Cup, and agreed to pay the expenses of the 'Varsity crews, both coming to and going from Philadelphia, the housing of the boats, and boarding of the crews for one week preceding the race. A mass meeting of the college decided to accept. A new shell was purchased and the crew began to train under G. D. Parmly, '76. On June 10 the crew went to the Colonnade Hotel, Philadelphia.

The Press says:

"The race was held over the National Course on June 24. Captain McLaren of Princeton was suffering from an abscess and in no condition to row. Nevertheless Princeton took the water first, getting off in fine style and leading by one-half length. Pennsylvania soon forged ahead, passing both crews. Princeton was rowing thirty-six strokes to the minute; then Columbia quickened her stroke to forty-four and soon passed Princeton. The Princeton crew were ragged in their recovery and did not make the catch or finish at the proper time. Captain McLaren, however, stuck bravely to his work and called on his men for a spurt, which they gave with a will, but the long gap was not lessened and Princeton finished six lengths behind."

- M. Edgar, '82, Secretary.

There was little interest, however, in the sport, as the class races show. These had been postponed from the fall to the spring, but even then they were not held. Only two crews had entered, from the class of '80 and '83. A few days before the race the class of '80 withdrew their crew. Accordingly, on the morning set for the race, '83 rowed over the course. Then the class of '80 changed their minds and telegraphed that they would row in the afternoon. But '83 declined to row and claimed the race.

As for the University crew, the Club met the expenses by assessing each man in college one dollar. A professional coach, Mr. Kennedy, of Maine, was secured and the crew trained faithfully, spending the Easter vacation on the Schuylkill River. Ten days before the race in June the crew went to their quarters at the Riverside Mansion. The Press says:

"Kennedy has been coaching them to a pace of thirty-three to thirty-five strokes to the minute, which is slow considering the short distance, a mile and a half. The reason is the size of number three, who, it is believed, will not be able to last out the distance, at say forty strokes. The time, however, is partly made up for by the length of the slide, which is longer by several inches than that of the other crews. The boys are in excellent trim, rested wholly on the Sabbath as became Presbyterian catechumens, and expect to make a good pace whether they win or not. They will row in one of Waters' shells."

Again Princeton got started first, but unfortunately had the outer course and the rougher water. Princeton rowed and steered well until the last half mile, but then she weakened and fell rapidly to the rear. The time, however, was five seconds faster than that of last year.

In the fall of 1880, the Club had the following officers:

- C. E. Manierre, '81, President.
- W. F. Robinson, '81, Vice-President.
- M. Edgar, '82, Treasurer.
- G. B. Jennison, '83, Secretary.
- J. T. Cowan, '81, Captain.

But nothing of interest occurred until on May 30, 1881, when the Varsity made its first public appearance at the Passaic Regatta, Newark. In the first heat, the Albany City crew finished first, Princeton second and Excelsior third. In the final heat, Princeton led by a length at the start which she maintained until a foul occurred between them and the Albany's, which lost them the place. The crew was Long before the crew went to Philadelphia for the Childs Cup Race, Princeton and Columbia had protested Hart of the Pennsylvania crew, alleging that he was ineligible under the spirit if not the letter of the regulation: "Undergraduate members of any department of the University." Hart's membership consisted in matriculation as a student in the summer course of the Medical Department. This was only a special course, because it did not grant a diploma but only a certificate of proficiency.

The University of Pennsylvania consented to replace Hart, and the postponed race was to be held on July 5. After Princeton had been training on the Schuylkill for some time, they were astonished to hear Pennsylvania announce that Hart was to row. The Pennsylvania coach, Ellis Ward, insisted that Hart must remain, else the crew would surely be defeated. But certain members of the Regatta committee supported Princeton and Columbia, in their position, that he was not eligible; and these, rather than submit to the coach, resigned. Columbia and Princeton remained firm in their demand that the Pennsylvania crew, with Hart, should be disqualified, and the only concession that they would make, even on the day of the race, was that the final decision in the matter should be left open until after the alleged race, in order that Pennsylvania might have ample time to produce further testimony as to Hart's eligibility. On the afternoon of the race Columbia was forced to withdraw their crew because one of their men had strained his back. The other two crews, however, were found in their shells at the stake-boat at the appointed time,

"not for a race, but only for a 'row over' to sustain their claim for a cup which neither of them made any effort to win. Princeton, starting east, hugged the east shore, moved slowly and so carelessly that they nearly fouled a conspicuous buoy. The University of Pennsylvania were spoiling for a fight and challenged every rowing craft along the course from six-oared barged to wherries."

In the evening, J. T. Goodwin, Columbia, Davidson Kennedy, University of Pennsylvania, and H. K. Devereux, '80, Princeton, sat to hear the additional testimony on affirmation of Hart's eligibility and to award the trophy to whichever club they might decide had properly rowed over the course. After a long secret session it was announced: "The meeting was perfectly amicable and the cup was awarded to Princeton." This contest, however, led to a convention in January, 1882, where the following rule of eligibility was adopted:

"Any man who is studying for a degree and has attended regularly the lectures, recitations and examinations given in the University for the said degree during the last half of the college year next preceding any race, shall be eligible to row on his college crew for the Childs Cup."

THIRD ANNUAL INTERCOLLEGIATE RACE

FOR THE CHILDS CHALLENGE CUP.

SCHUYLKILL RIVER, JULY 5, 1881.

First place awarded to Princeton, time not taken.

The Princeton crew :

| Stroke—G. B. Jennison, '8, . . . . .      | 155     |

The fall of 1881 began with the following officers in charge :

- R. K. Clarke, '82, President.
- Samuel Lloyd, '82, Vice-President.
- W. C. Scott, '83, } Treasurers.
- L. Riggs, '83, }
- D. M. Look, '84, Secretary.
- G. B. Jennison, '83, Captain.

But nothing occurred until spring, when the crew began to practice on the canal. On May 30 they entered the Newark Regatta and won second place, time nine minutes, thirty-two seconds. The Albany crew was first, time nine minutes, sixteen and one-quarter seconds.

Columbia was not represented in the Challenge Cup Race of 1882. The time was very slow, due to the southwest wind blowing directly against the rowers. The Press says:

"For nearly half a mile it was anybody's race. Princeton never deviated from the long, swinging, thirty-six stroke with which they started. The Pennsylvania's hugged the western shore, and their opponents by some resistless attraction, tried to get as near to them as possible. For the first third of the course, not a baulk was apparent. Pennsylvania's quick stroke at the start caused it to forge ahead, but the lead was not beyond recovery, and the Orange and Black skimmed along with a stately, clock-like motion as to give every promise of evening with their opponents. Just before the Laurel Hill bend, Pennsylvania settled to a slow, all-day, thirty-six stroke, and for nearly a half a mile the crews were like automata, the blue of the Pennsylvania oar flashing the light simultaneously with the Princeton spoons. It now became apparent that the Jersey men were doomed to defeat. For some inscrutable reason Baker steered strongly eastward, then evidently attempting to correct himself pursued a sinuous course for a few seconds, finally recovering himself but not until the Pennsylvania had won an irretrievable advantage.

"The last one-half mile was desperate work in both shells. Pennsylvania showed themselves stayers by putting on a fine spurt and running up to a good thirty-eight stroke. Jennison called upon his men to do likewise, but they were unable to respond. Bravely but desperately they struggled to shut out the daylight already visible between the shells."

Pennsylvania won in nine minutes, thirty-two seconds; and two lengths in the rear came Princeton, nine minutes; thirty-six seconds, with Howell in a dead faint.

Princeton sent this same crew to Lake George on July 4, where they met Pennsylvania, Wesleyan, Bowdoin, and Cornell in a one and one-half mile race.

"The wind and rain made this race disagreeable to watch, but those who stood it out were amply repaid. At the word the crews started on nearly even terms, Cornell and U. of P. forging to the front. At the one-half mile Cornell led slightly, the others being bunched together. From there to the mile flag the race was as pretty a one as was ever rowed, the various crews passing and repassing each other so constantly as to produce the conviction that it was anybody's race. Princeton was leading at the mile flag with the slow, steady, thirty-five stroke, but a little later, they faltered and allowed Pennsylvania and Wesleyan to forge ahead. The superior steering of the Pennsylvania and the fine spurts of the Wesleyan crew began to tell and they surely and steadily passed to the front. In the last third mile it was evident that the race for first place was between these two, with great uncertainty as to which of the three remaining crews would be last. Here the beautiful steering of the Pennsylvania boys was noticeable. Their course was straight as an arrow, while the Wesleyan crew swerved considerably to the left. This undoubtedly had the effect of causing the Wesleyans to lose at least a length, and the Pennsylvania boys crossed the line a length and three-quarters ahead of their sturdy opponents.

"Meantime a fierce struggle had been going on between Princeton, Cornell, and Bowdoin for third place, and at the finish the three crews fairly lapping each other, Princeton crossing the line three lengths behind Wesleyan, and again Howells fainted."

Late in the fall of 1882, the following officers were elected :

- J. P. Flint, '83, President.
- F. Duane, '83, Vice-President.
- G. Hersh, '84, Treasurer.
- W. L. Granberry, '85, Secretary.
- G. B. Jennison, '83, Captain.

In the spring there seemed to be a revival of interest in rowing, perhaps because it was thought to be good training for football. The Varsity crew entered the Newark Regatta on May 30. In the trial heat, Princeton won from the Mutuals of Albany, in seven minutes, fifty-five seconds, four seconds faster than any Princeton record. But in the final heat, Princeton was fouled by the winners and finished third. On June 12 the same crew rowed in the Harlem Regatta and won first place in the mile race.

1st—Princeton, 5 minutes, 41  $\frac{3}{4}$  seconds.
2d—Albany, 5 " 47  $\frac{3}{4}$  "
3d—Columbia.

Princeton also entered a second or Junior crew composed of the following men:

Bow—E. M. Kempshall, '85.
No. 2—J. A. Fisher, '85.
No. 3—W. J. Greene, '85.
No. 4—A. Hardcastle, '85.
No. 5—F. Griffith, '85. (Capt.)
Stroke—R. M. Parker, '85.

And the Junior race resulted,

1st—Princeton, 6 minutes, 4  $\frac{3}{4}$  seconds.
2d—Nonpareils, 6 " 11  $\frac{1}{2}$  "

These successful races naturally aroused greater interest in the Childs Cup Race, which was held on June 15. The time of this race was decidedly slow, partly due to erratic steering, which brought the crews into the face of the wind.

"There was a decided contrast between the crews, both as regards physique and method. The Princeton men are undoubtedly the stronger crew, but they have yet to master the technique of rowing. They lack dash and with all their undoubted strength they appear incapable of sustaining a spurt for more than a couple hundred yards. Their recovery is slow and number three's action decidedly wooden. Pennsylvania, on the other hand, rowing a waiting race for two-thirds of the way, with exemplary patience and excellent judgment and coming away at the proper moment, showed that they possess a turn of fine speed, with which their warmest admirers had hardly credited them. Both crews took the water exactly together, Princeton rowing thirty-seven strokes to the minute, and Pennsylvania somewhat faster, but the long, steady stroke of Bird kept Princeton in the lead.

"For the first hundred yards they remained on perfectly even terms and then, Princeton, already quickening, forged a few feet ahead. At this early stage of the race, it was evident that Pennsylvania were rowing with their heads as well as their hands. The stroke did not quicken even a shade, and as Princeton, rowing at high pressure, crept further and further ahead, the college adherents grew wild with delight. But Pennsylvania were only biding their time and driving their boat with the long, sweeping stroke and rapid recovery of Ellis Ward's training. They rowed a stern race until three-quarters of a mile had been covered as calmly and comfortably as though they were pulling further and further from their opponents at every stroke.

"Up to this point of the race both boats had been hugging the western shore and keeping very close together. Now the stroke of Pennsylvania quickened, and at this point want of judgment was evinced by the Princeton captain and the race was practically lost. The leaders failed to spurt or at least made no endeavor to maintain their advantage, although they were by no means distressed.

"The Pennsylvania crew pulling splendidly came up hand over hand. In a couple hundred yards Princeton's lead was reduced to a length, and on completing the mile, the nose of Pennsylvania's boat was abreast of number three. At this point the boats were dangerously near together, and it appeared from the referee's boat that Princeton was crowding Pennsylvania; a slight foul took place. The oars barely touched, however, and as a matter of fact neither crew was prejudicially interfered with. Pennsylvania gave way and the race continued without a check.

"Right across the river went the boats and when they straightened out and made for home Pennsylvania had a lead of fully a length. Here Princeton spurted but all unavailingly. Although momentarily they got their boat's nose alongside their opponents' rudder, Pennsylvania responded gamely and drew away rapidly after passing the head of the island. From this point the race was a procession, as forging further and further ahead, the Pennsylvania boat finally passed the judges, winning by two lengths.

"The Princeton boat pulled alongside the referee's boat and claimed a foul. Mr. Eustic at once told them very courteously that the claim was preposterous, as Pennsylvania was blameless in the matter. He added further that the chance of neither crew was affected by the foul, such as it was, and clinched his decision by saying that had Pennsylvania ceased rowing and claimed the race on the foul, he should have felt bound under the circumstances, to award them the race."

FIFTH ANNUAL INTERCOLLEGIATE RACE

SCHUYLKILL RIVER, JUNE 15, 1883.

National Course—One and a half mile straightaway.

1st—Pennsylvania, 9 minutes, 31 1-5 seconds.

The Princeton crew :

|                                    | Age. | Weight. | Height.            |

| Stroke—C. W. Bird, '85,            | 19   | 155     | 5 10               |

This crew won third place in the Lake George Regatta on July 4, 1883.

"The water was very rough and many attempts were made before a fair flying start was secured. Pennsylvania took the lead and Wesleyan was a close second. At the one-half mile it was doubtful whether Pennsylvania or Wesleyan led, but here Cornell, close to the shore, struck smooth water and in the next quarter of a mile, from being three lengths in the rear, passed rapidly to the front. Pennsylvania turned toward Cornell and sought to reduce the lead. Spurt after spurt followed between Wesleyan and Pennsylvania, but gradually Wesleyan dropped to the rear, and Pennsylvania started in a fruitless attempt to catch the Cornell boys, who were steadily increasing the gap.

"Meantime the sturdy stroke of the Princeton boys had closed the gap which threatened to make them a bad fourth, and at the mile flag the race took on the appearance of a procession, Cornell leading Pennsylvania nearly six lengths, while some three lengths behind that crew, Wesleyan and Princeton struggled on nearly equal terms. From the mile flag the only struggle was between Wesleyan and Princeton. Spurt answered spurt and had the struggle been for first position, it would have been highly exciting.

"The water was so rough that it almost swamped the Princeton shell which had the outer course.

On the following day Captain Jennison, of Princeton, won the Single Scull Race. He took the lead at the very start and kept it easily throughout the rather uninteresting race; for at the half mile Kohler jumped his seat and was compelled to wait fully thirty seconds before starting again. The strong head wind made the water choppy and prevented even good time.

The spring of 1884 found the following officers of the Association:

G. Hersh, '84, President.
F. S. Hicks, '84, Vice-President.
W. F. Jackson, '85, Treasurer.
S. M. Bevin, '86, Secretary.
C. W. Bird, '85, Captain.

But there was a great deal of opposition to rowing at Princeton. The main cause of this, as well as of her defeats, consisted in the lack of any boating interest. "There is rarely a man who can play football or baseball who will not, such are the attractions and facilities of these staple sports; but many men who could make good oarsmen are unwilling to try." "There is no fire or glory in the sport as it must exist at Princeton." There was lacking that general interest which "is essential to success in any line of athletics." The races were the cause of the crew; men did not row for the sport. It was felt that the futility of her attempts to row would weaken the good impression made by Princeton's activity and pluck, as displayed in other athletic contests. "If Princeton cannot do a thing well, she had better not do it at all." But despite discouragement from the alumni, the college mass meeting voted to maintain a crew, and when open weather came there were at least fourteen men in training. Mr. George Hosmer was secured as coach and two crews began training.

The Princeton crew:

| Stroke—B. B. Smith, '85, . . . . .            | 142 "       |

Both these crews were entered in the Passaic Regatta, at Newark, on May 30, 1884. In the Junior Race, Princeton came in third. But the Senior Race was a farce. From the very first Princeton was ahead, but the poor steering of the remaining boats involved them in so many fouls that they were called back. A second time the fouls were made. Then the referee made an effort to start all the crews at the last half mile. But Captain Bird said Princeton would row the full course of one and one-half miles or not at all, and withdrew.

The Senior crew was entered in the Harlem Regatta of June 4, but their entry was received a day after the entries had officially closed, and three days before the race. The Secretary telegraphed that the entry had been accepted, but on the day of the race, the other competitor, the Atlantas, entered a protest against Princeton. Although Princeton crossed the finish line fully one minute ahead of the Atlantas, the cup was awarded to Atlantas, much to Princeton's disgust.

In order to make the contest for the Childs Challenge Cup more exciting, Cornell was invited to enter this year and accepted. The Press says:

"In the start Princeton caught the water first, while Cornell on the far side was particularly slow in getting hold of the water; indeed Princeton and Cornell pushed their second stroke together. Pennsylvania got off in excellent shape, and no accident happening to any of the crews in the first ten strokes, it was now a race without any chance of a recall. Before these strokes were finished however, it was already apparent that the last place was to be the place of Princeton. They were tugging away with every honest intention of getting there but were pulling in bad form compared with the others, their boat rocking and their oars splashing the water about, while, stroke by stroke, they were losing ground. During the first minute Princeton pulled forty-two strokes, Pennsylvania thirty-nine and Cornell but thirty-seven. The rowing of the latter was particularly good, each stroke being well pulled through and the boat traveling on an even keel without the slightest indication of a hang between the strokes. Before reaching the row of ice-houses on the east shore, Cornell had obtained a half length's lead of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania was also ahead of Princeton, but they had taken a line direct for the angle at Soapstone Point on the west shore, and being so wide apart from Cornell, it was the merest guess work as to their relative positions. At Soapstone Point, a little over a half mile below the start, Princeton had come over toward Pennsylvania, and the latter were then a length in front. Cornell kept drawing away east of midstream, their boat going much more evenly than either of the others. Off Princeton Station the leading crews were timed at thirty-six each, while Princeton had dropped to thirty-eight and were steadily losing ground. Just below the station and in the course of the boats was a canal boat going down stream but well out from the shore. Pennsylvania went outside of it without altering their course, and the tow line was dropped for their accommodation, so that they passed the boat without any loss of time. Princeton steered outside and already they were getting very ragged in their stroke. At the mile the two leaders were rowing thirty-four strokes and Princeton thirty-six. Cornell was rapidly nearing the grandstand, and the murmur of encouraging cheers becoming louder every moment, they too began spurring, and reached thirty-eight strokes, with Pennsylvania pulling forty. At the upper end of the grandstand Pennsylvania was nearly the full length of their boat in front. It was now do or die with Cornell, and with a great effort they responded to the Cornell yells, and so rapidly did they decrease the lead of Pennsylvania that when the flag fell, the stem of the Cornell boat was level with the forward end of the cockpit of Princeton. Princeton was three lengths behind."

Princeton sent a crew to the Intercollegiate Regatta at Saratoga on July 7.

"Pennsylvania was first to get away with a dozen spinning strokes, and they were soon nearly a length in the lead. Princeton's boat seemed to hang and at the end of two hundred yards they were well to the rear. At the start Pennsylvania and Columbia pulled thirty-eight, Bowdoin forty-two, Princeton thirty-four and Cornell thirty-six. The latter when they settled to their powerful stroke were holding and slightly gaining on the leaders. Pennsylvania saw their move and set out to match them. The two boats soon began to leave the other crews, and inch by inch the Cornell boys gained. When the first quarter was reached, they were one-half a length behind Pennsylvania, and Bowdoin was third, a half dozen lengths in the rear. Columbia closely followed, while Princeton seemed already hopelessly distanced. The race between the leaders still continued, with Cornell gaining. At a half a mile they were neck and neck, each rowing a sweeping thirty-two stroke.

"In a few minutes Cornell's bow was in front and as they still kept gaining, it looked as if victory would be theirs by two or three lengths. At the three-quarters they were easily a half a length in advance and there was no change of position as they dashed past the mile flag.

"Here the smooth water began, and Sergeant the Pennsylvania stroke, soon quickened the stroke. At the same time Princeton began to row really for the first time. At the mile they were last. Quickly they slipped by Columbia, then Bowdoin, and from that time to the finish they did some of the prettiest rowing seen during the race. Steadily they gained on the leaders, lessening the distance they were behind from ten to four lengths. All this time Cornell was still in the lead with Pennsylvania gaining. Bowdoin was practically out of the race. During the first mile she surprised everybody by her spurt, occupying the third place with ease. Just before the mile was reached, that great "hulk" called the Lady of the Lake, slipped out of a cove near Bowdoin and nearly filled the latter's boat with her swash. Columbia kept the fourth which she was expected to do.

"Feeling perfectly at home, Pennsylvania kept gaining; Scofield of the Cornell crew saw the danger and quickly cried 'Now!' to his men for a spurt. Sergeant fortunately had spurred also. At every stroke they gained on Cornell. A hundred feet from the finish Cornell was leading by four yards. At ten feet they were even, and just then Pennsylvania's oars were in the water at the beginning of a stroke while Cornell's were out. That stroke finished it and sent Pennsylvania in the winner by less than a yard in the magnificent time of eight minutes, thirty-nine and three-quarter seconds. Princeton was third by four lengths, but she finished nearly ten lengths ahead of Columbia. Bowdoin stopped when their boat filled."

This was the last race for Princeton. Everyone felt that Princeton's rowing days were over, and the following year an effort was made to bring the boat-house up to the campus as a training "cage" for the baseball team. To be sure the old crew of Bird, Harris, Smith and Greene kept together, and still rowed a little, but they entered no regattas. The death knell of rowing, as a sport at Princeton, was sounded in May, 1886, when the Treasurer submitted his final report:

| Balance,       | $58.13  |

This balance was turned over to the Athletic Executive Committee, and went into the "University Fund."

In December, 1891, the Daily Princetonian under the energetic management of Bowdye Phinizy, '92, tried to resurrect the sport, and sent out the following list of questions to twenty of the alumni:

"The Princetonian desires to place before its readers opinions of the alumni and friends of the College on the project of re-organizing the crew. To that end we would solicit a communication from you on this subject and would ask that you touch upon the following points, together with any other that may occur to you.

"1. What of our facilities for practice as compared with those of Oxford and Cambridge?

"2. What of weekly trips to Philadelphia for practice contests on the Schuylkill in order to become accustomed to racing on rough water?

"3. What would be the influence on our prowess in football, baseball and general athletics?

"4. What is your opinion on the general advisability and practicality of the plan?"

Many answers were printed in a special edition, dated January 19, 1892, and the general consensus of opinion was unfavorable: because of the probable expense; a singular lack of facilities, interference with football, baseball and track sports, in which athletics Princeton's strength lies; the already sufficient tax upon time in other sports; the probability that Princeton would have to confine its matches to second rate colleges; the improbability of success even if matches with first-class colleges were secured.

"The Canal is a wretched place, it is inconvenient to go to Trenton, and weekly trips to Philadelphia would weaken the college discipline as well as purse." The only remarks in favor of the sport were that Princeton loses many men because she has no crew; that the exercise develops football men, and the defeats of the past are due to the lack of proper coaching.

The Football Association bought a barge for the football men to train in, but it was used very little and soon disabled. Nothing more was done until the spring of 1897, when the Football Association accepted three shells from an alumnus. But very little use has been made of them, and no one in college now thinks that Princeton ever will have a crew, despite the prospect of the new Gymnasium with its rowing tank, and the rapid transit to Trenton.

sive order, as the New York men gave them no chance to get the ball into play, save at rare intervals, and the battle was fought almost throughout in front of the college goal. Once only did Princeton succeed in forcing the ball down in dangerous proximity to the New York goal, and then Balch was on hand and neatly stopped the adroit throw of Allen that nearly captured the goal. At length Ross ran down and made a fine throw at goal; the ball landed at A. Ritchie's feet, and he kicked it in—26 minutes.

The next game was also hardly fought, but the defence of Princeton was not nearly so stubborn, and at length the college men, after several narrow escapes, lost a second goal, A. Ritchie putting the ball through from the outskirts of a scrimmage in front of the Princeton goal—13 minutes.

After a brief rest the players again engaged, but this time Princeton were outplayed at all points; and, after a brief struggle, Ross neatly dropped the ball in front of Cluff, who put it through the posts cleverly—4 minutes. New York, having won three straight games, were declared the winners of the heat.

Thus the first season closed with three defeats and one partial victory.

Princeton, 1. N. Y. U., 1.

The lacrosse team entered the Waverly, N. J., tournament, and the New York University was the only other competitor. After a spirited contest of 19 minutes, during which time the ball was on the constant go from one end of the field to the other, New York University secured a goal. After a rest of 7 minutes the ball was again faced, and for 31 minutes both sides worked hard for a goal until time was called, owing to the disablement of a Princeton player. In 4 minutes play began again. The ball passed quickly towards the Princeton goal, and then as rapidly down the entire length of the field, when, by a skillful throw, Gilmore scored a goal for Princeton. Time, 1 minute. In 5 minutes more the ball was again faced. Only 9 minutes remained of the hour; the contest waxed hotter than ever, the Princeton men gradually pushing the ball toward their opponents' goal, where it remained, with two exceptions, until time was called. As the hour was over, and it was now too dark to play longer, the trophy—four flags—was divided between the two teams. The New York University team had already defeated the teams of Harvard and Columbia.

Princeton, 2. New York, 3.

Goals by Hall, Egbert, Leprohon, Matson.

Princeton played the New York lacrosse team at the Polo Grounds on October 29 and were defeated by 2 to 3. The chief fault of Princeton was their careless checking. The week before the New York team had been defeated by a team from Canada, and this had taught them the advantage of team play, and all through the game they displayed remarkably clever passing by pairs. The first game was quite sharply contested for a time between goal and goal, but the ball was carried through by Leprohon in 5 minutes. The second game was a repetition of the first, the ball being tossed between the contestants for five minutes and then driven between the posts by Matson. The third game was more hotly fought and some excellent play was made by both sides. The ball finally got into the hands of Princeton, and Hall and Riemann, assisting each other, made the goal and scored the game in 7 minutes. The fourth game was marked by quite expert playing. Balch made some clever stops and threw mightily, and Journeay made some powerful throws and sent the ball for a space skimming about at pleasure. The game was scored by New York in ten minutes. In the fifth game the rain fairly poured down, but both teams did good work. Egbert got the ball up and secured the goal. But the contest was awarded to New York, who had won 3 goals out of 5.

Princeton, 5. Columbia, 0.

Princeton won the toss and chose the eastern goal. The ball was faced, and in an instant Gilmore caught it nicely and made for Columbia's goal. He lost it, but Rieman was on hand, and he quickly passed it to Hall, who drove it between the flags in two minutes, thus winning the first score for Princeton. Soon the ball was again in Columbia's quarters, and by sharp playing on the part of Poe and Hall, Princeton's second goal was secured in fifteen minutes. Columbia's play now became much weaker, while that of her opponents constantly improved. In three minutes more, White had scored another goal. Before the time was over, Rieman and Poe had scored two more goals.

Princeton, 0. Harvard, 3.

The deciding match of this tournament was won from Princeton by Harvard. The ball was faced by Coolidge and Field, and Princeton was quickly placed on the defensive. The ball remained for some time dangerously near Princeton's goal, but Gilmore gained possession of it, and before he was stopped he had transferred it to Harvard's territory. Having quickly passed it to Hewitt, the latter made a fine attempt to score, but the ball went a little wide of the flags. It was returned, and play was resumed in the centre of the field. The struggle here was fierce and long, but Harvard succeeded finally in getting the ball and placing it again in Princeton's territory. After a brilliant exhibition of defensive play on the part of Princeton, Sturgis gained a rather doubtful goal for Harvard in eight minutes. Princeton then forced the ball to Harvard's territory, and notwithstanding the splendid defence work of Thorndyke, Walsh, and Sturgis, nearly succeeded in scoring several times. Gradually the ball was worked back, and then, by a lucky throw, Crecy succeeded in scoring a second goal for Harvard in ten minutes. Princeton tried hard to score, but her opponents' defensive play was too excellent. By good running and throwing, Walsh secured the third goal in ten minutes. Harvard clearly excelled Princeton in running and general defence play, while Princeton was superior in throwing and catching.

On March 11, 1882, the Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association was organized with Columbia, Harvard, New York University, and Princeton represented. The rules of the National Association were adopted, each college to play one game with every other member. The following officers were elected:

G. W. Gilmore, '83, Princeton, President.
D. F. Haasis, Vice-President.
J. Marquand, Secretary.
H. W. Skerry, Treasurer.

Princeton, 1. Harvard, 3.

On May 26, Harvard played at Princeton and won by 3 to 1. The former excelled in quick passing and long throwing, while Princeton surpassed them in running and dodging. After half an hour of exciting work, with the advantages decidedly in Princeton's favor, Rieman scored the first goal. Ten minutes later Harvard tied the score. In fifteen minutes Harvard had secured two more goals and won the game. In the exhibition play that followed Harvard secured four goals.

Princeton, 1. Columbia, 0.

In the game with Columbia on May 30, the ball was taken down to the Columbia goal at once and there it remained during the whole play. It was evident from the very first that Columbia's sole object was to effect a tie by bunching her men in front of her goal. Notwithstanding this, two goals were thrown in the first half hour, neither of which was allowed by the Columbia umpire.

In the second half Columbia played better, but Princeton again brought the ball close to the Columbia goal. Riggs at last got it, made a splendid run, and sent it squarely between the posts.

Columbia, however, claimed a foul on the ground that the racket had been held in an unlawful position by the runner, and the referee decided in their favor. After this the ball was carried down toward Princeton's goal, but in a few minutes it was sent back, and in a close scrimmage, Hodge put it through the posts and won the game.

Princeton, 2. Yale, 0.

The first game in the fall of 1882 was played at New Haven on October 14, against Yale. Both teams played cautiously at first but gradually warmed up to the sport. The first goal was thrown for Princeton by Spence after 25 minutes' play. In the second half Poe threw several pretty "tries," but each was stopped by the excellent goal-keeping of Connell. Spence secured another goal in 12 minutes.

The game with Yale on the home field on October 21 was the first match that ever called forth any notice from the college at large. The attendance was very fair and though the game was rather prolonged, the audience showed no disposition to leave until a final score resulted. During the first part of the game Princeton clearly surpassed her opponents, but soon the contest became more close. After almost an hour's close work Riggs secured a goal. Yale obtained the next goal by a lucky swipe of Lincoln's after 25 minutes of play. Both teams now worked for all they were worth, Yale on the defensive entirely. Nevertheless Riggs succeeded in securing a goal from a scrimmage in front of Yale posts which decided the match.

The playing in this match was lively. Struggle after struggle followed in quick succession, and there were many fine throws, good dodges, and stiff checking. At first the play was evenly distributed all over the field, but toward the end of the match the Princeton were forced on the defensive. The match was finally won by New York, who got two games in 5 and 18 minutes. After 17 minutes' additional play without a goal being taken the time was declared up.

When the spring of 1883 came, lacrosse seemed settled on a good basis as a sport at Princeton, and for the first time received the hearty support of the college. At least thirty candidates were trying for the team.

The season began with the match of April 21, in which, for the first time in the history of the sport, Princeton defeated the New York Club. The game was played with nine men, as several of the visitors failed to appear. The ground was in excellent condition and, notwithstanding the evident want of practice, there were many exhibitions of fine playing. At the beginning of the match the New York men rushed the playing so hard that the Princeton flags were nearly captured. Princeton saved them, however, and forced the ball down the field. This demoralized the defence of New York and they lost the first goal in 12 minutes, Hall throwing the ball through the flags. In the next goal, Princeton kept New York constantly on the defensive, and Poe threw another goal in 17 minutes. The last goal of the game was thrown in 14 minutes by Tucker.

Princeton played New York University on April 28, at New Brunswick. Forty-five seconds sufficed for Poe to score the first goal. In 9 minutes Rieman made another, and, ten minutes later, he threw the third and winning goal for Princeton. The game was thus won in 20 minutes, the shortest college game on record. In the exhibition play that followed, Princeton won two more goals in 13 and 2 minutes. The ground was too slippery for hard play. Some of the individual play was good, but the men did not do any effective team work ; they were strong, fleet, and enthusiastic enough, but did not work together or employ scientific tactics.

Princeton, 0. Harvard, 3.

In the game of May 12, Harvard presented the strongest team that ever represented her at lacrosse. They were reinforced by Simpson, the veteran player of the Union Lacrosse Club of Boston, who was at the time in the Dental School at Harvard. During the first 20 minutes Princeton played nervously, following the ball too closely and allowed Harvard to gather about the goal. Harvard's attack was most systematic, and they followed the favorite tactics of the Indians—dropping the ball in goal by the overhand throw. Marquand secured the first goal after 8 minutes' of sharp play. The second was made in the same time by Nichols. Princeton rallied at this point and played a steady game to the end, threatening the Harvard goal, and now and then giving the goal-keeper something to do. The third goal was made by a lucky swipe by Woods in 11 minutes. During the last 33 minutes no goal was allowed for either side, though one was claimed by Princeton. The team felt the loss of Spence, which, added to Poe's lameness, rendered their attack inefficient. The team showed excellent condition and surpassed their opponents in endurance, long throwing, dodging and running ; while Harvard played a magnificent attack and a strong defence. The "drop-in" goals were wonders in their frequency and accuracy.

Princeton, 3. Yale, 0.

In the Yale game of May 19, the playing was unsteady at first but finally became systematic. Riggs received the ball on a drop-in from Spence, and threw the first goal in 9 minutes. In the second goal Yale claimed a foul, alleging that Rieman had knocked the stick out of the goal-keeper's hand just before Poe made the goal, by a swift underhand throw, after 49 minutes of play. The referee did not allow the claim, and for the rest of the game the Yale goal was constantly in danger. Finally, Poe passed the ball to Spence, who threw the last goal for Princeton.

Princeton, 1. Baltimore, 1.

On June 27, the team went to Baltimore and played a draw game with the Druids that lasted two hours. The play started at a furious pace as soon as Blakemore and Penniman faced the ball in the centre. After 13 minutes, Frick secured the ball in the left field and tipped it to Hopkins, who sent the ball down in front of the Princeton goals. Here Peck secured it, but Gamble and Ober swept it through the flags. When the ball was again faced, Princeton fought the quick Druids down into a state of excessive fatigue, and at the end of 1 hour and 20 minutes got a goal. It was a long fight, almost too long to be interesting; for the men on both sides got very tired and played with less spirit. The Druids, who were not seasoned by the constant practice of the college men, were at last worn out, and Princeton had possession of the ball nearly all the time. At last Rieman, by a lucky tip, gave the ball to Poe at a time when he should have been covered, but was not. He threw for goal and the ball struck Pleasants on the shoulder but glanced on through the posts. After a short rest the players went in to finish up, but time was called in 10 minutes and the game declared a draw.

Princeton, Harvard, and Yale had each won three games in the championship series, and therefore no award could be made.

There was a great deal of interest in lacrosse in the spring, probably because of the tie in the championship series of the previous year, and because this was the only sport in which Princeton had defeated Yale, and been defeated by Harvard.

Princeton, 0. New York, 4.

In the New York game the ball was faced at 1:15 P.M. by Marson and Gaither. Spence and Cottle acted as captains, and L. Riggs and Pearce as umpires. Marson got the ball for the New York at the fall and dropped it over the flags where Hodge threw it up the field. It was hardly there before Gilmore had it, and running past his check, again dropped it on the flags. A tussle now took place between Flannery and H. Hodge, the former dodging in and out among the Princeton defence until he got a chance to pass it to Ritchie, who found an opening in the Princeton defence. Time, 4 minutes. Within the same time Burns got the ball, and by a good run and a pass to Ritchie, the latter scored the second goal. Gilmore then by good play got the ball within Burns' reach, and the latter scored a goal; but on a claim of foul—McCaffrey pushing Riggs unfairly—the goal did not count. Seven minutes afterward, however, Burns got the ball again from Flannery, and this time it did count. McCaffrey then scored the fourth and final goal.

The National Lacrosse Association decided to send an American Lacrosse Team to England and Ireland during the spring of 1884, and on this Princeton was represented by J. A. Hodge, '83, H. W. Hall, '83, and S. J. Poe, '84; while Yale and Harvard had one representative each. Of the eleven games played on this trip, the Americans won all but one. Just before sailing, this team came down to Princeton.

Princeton played remarkably well from the start, and in a very few minutes Egbert was enabled to try for goal on a pass from Hodge and barely missed. Good throwing by Mathis and Hodge kept the Princeton goal from being threatened for more than a few minutes at a time. The first goal of the game was scored by Simpson in 10 minutes, on a run-in and swift throw. The second goal was thrown in 15 minutes by Poe. In 2 minutes Blakemore threw the first goal for Princeton on a pass from Gamble. The visitors now pushed Princeton very hard, and the compact and vigorous play of the defence averted for five minutes the goal which was finally swiped by Ritchie, from one of the numerous drop-ins. In the second inning Princeton played with more confidence and harmony, and in a scramble in their opponents' goal they failed to score only through the falling of the goal posts. Each team made several unsuccessful tries, and Johnson finally threw the fourth goal for his team after 20 minutes' play.

In 35 seconds Blakemore had passed to R. Hodge to Gamble, who threw a neat goal from one side. Yale again took wind and for 49 minutes the final goal was hotly contested and finally thrown by Twombly.

The opening championship game was played with Harvard on May 17, and resulted in Princeton's victory, by the score of 2-1. For 49 minutes the ball favored first one goal and then the other, with a preference for Harvard's. Finally, Egbert threw the first goal on a pass from Gamble. Thirty-three minutes later, Blakemore threw the second goal on a pass from Gamble. Eight minutes had passed before Churchill secured Harvard's goal by the high bounce of a long throw from centre-field. Harvard made some desperate tries in the few minutes that remained, but failed to score again. Harvard men distinguished themselves by their fine passing and catching, while Princeton outran them, and almost invariably secured the ball in scrimmages.

Three minutes more, full of neat dodging, yielded another goal by Gamble. In the next 10 and 4 minutes Gamble secured two more goals. Hodge scored the next on a run and long throw. In 1 minute after frequent drop-ins, the sixth and last goal was knocked through by Penick on a swipe from Blakemore.

Princeton, 3. Yale, 1.

The third and last game of the championship was won by Princeton from Yale on May 31 at New Haven. By means of a combination of rapid swipes, Yale secured a goal in 2 minutes, the ball being thrown by Twombly. This peculiar method of attacking goal, so long and exclusively practised by Yale, though successful for the moment, proved unavailable after the first surprise. The Princeton defence shook off the nervousness at first manifested and adapted themselves to Yale's peculiar play. Blakemore secured a goal in 27 minutes, followed with another by Egbert, in 13 minutes. The superior condition of the Princeton team now began to tell, and the last minutes of the game witnessed Princeton's best playing. Yale, on the other hand, was getting used up, and their play lacked energy and became very nervous. Just 10 seconds before time was called, Gaither, on a run-in after Hodge's throw, dropped the ball between the flags. Princeton was therefore awarded the championship.

The first championship game of lacrosse in 1885 was played on May 2 at Princeton, and resulted in the defeat of University of New York. The team lacked discipline, but possessed talent, as shown in individual plays. The ball was forced at 2 P.M. and was immediately drawn into the visitors' territory, and in just 5 minutes after the game was opened Gamble threw the first goal. Another goal was made by Blakemore, and later by Spence. The New York men played well, and several times nearly succeeded in securing a goal, but they seemed to lack staying powers, so that they could not keep an advantage in position when it was gained.

Princeton, 0. Druids, 3.

On May 9 the lacrosse match between Princeton and the Druids, which had been postponed from October, 1884, was held at Oriole Park, Baltimore. After 12 minutes of close playing, Penniman captured the ball behind Princeton's goal, and with a neat dodge delivered it between the poles. In 6 minutes, Frick, on the most brilliant catch of the day, dropped a second goal for the Druids. The whole field was most hotly contested, but neither team was able to score during the remainder of the inning, though Primrose and Hodge were compelled again and again to prevent scoring only by the most difficult stops. A few minutes after the second inning opened, Frick threw a very difficult goal from an angle, and though the playing was vigorous until the time was called, no more goals were made. The playing of Princeton was a great advance in every way over the game against New York University the preceding week, and had it not been for several brilliant stops of Primrose, the improvement would certainly have been indicated by the score. Princeton caught better and threw better than the home team. But there was still too much trotting instead of running, and though the defence men were in fair condition the attack often failed to secure the ball only from their want of condition.

The play was brilliant and exciting throughout, with the advantage with Harvard the greater part of the time. During the first 25 minutes neither side scored. Woods made two tries at goal but missed both times. In his first trial the ball went within two feet of the posts. Just before the end of the first half Blakemore secured a goal. At the beginning of the second half Princeton kept the ball near Harvard's goal, and in 3 minutes Gamble secured a goal. Harvard now commenced to brace up, and the ball was kept near Princeton's goal by the brilliant play of Twombly and Hood. Woods tried for goal. The ball struck the goal post and bounded away. Then the ball was snapped back to Woods again and he threw Harvard's first goal—7 minutes. The ball was driven at once to Harvard's goal and again Princeton was kept from scoring

Princeton, 1. Druids, 3.

Princeton entered the Sixth National Tournament for the Oelrichs Cup on Decoration Day at Prospect Park. In the first round she easily defeated New York University by a score of 7 to 0. Princeton then was defeated by the Druids, 3 to 1. Throughout the hour Princeton forced the play and made the ball a constant menace to the Druids' goal. Princeton was superior in running, and the long and accurate throwing of her defence was excellent. But while Frick had only to get the ball for an instant within even long range of the goal to drive one of his throws between Princeton's flags, Gamble and Spence, unable to dodge successfully because of the slippery ground, could not seem to approach near enough to the goal to use their slower throwing with effect. The Druids secured the first goal in 7 minutes on a swipe by Riggs. Frick made the second in 18 minutes on a carom on the goal post, and 15 minutes later Gamble threw Princeton's only goal. Soon after this Frick made a second throw which was brilliantly stopped by the goal-keeper, but his next throw in 10 minutes was successful.

Princeton, 1. Brooklyn Athletics, 0.

Princeton opened her season by playing the Brooklyn Athletics on April 24, and defeated them by one goal. Princeton forced the play from the start and kept the ball well up the field during the first part of the game, after which the lack of training hindered continued aggressive play. After 7 minutes' play, Harlan ran in and threw the only goal of the game. During the remaining 23 minutes the play was active on both sides, but neither was able to score. As the first game of the season the play was encouraging. The defence was steady and even. The centre was faulty in picking up the ball, while the passing and bunching of the attack was poor.

In the game with Yale on May 1, the team play of Princeton was wellnigh perfect. Ten seconds after the game opened, Nicholson, by a long throw secured a goal. Sixteen minutes later R. Hodge threw the second goal. In another 12 minutes a third goal was secured, and Yale seemed to lose heart. A few minutes later R. Hodge threw the last goal. Yale then tried to force the ball, but the careful keeping of Princeton's goal prevented any scoring. This unconditional defeat by Princeton put an end to Princeton, 5. Stevens, 0.

Princeton played Stevens at Princeton on May 12 before a very small audience. Six minutes after the game began, R. Hodge secured the first goal by a difficult side shot. Three minutes later, Richardson, after a beautiful pass by Bliss, threw the second goal. The fighting then came dangerously near Princeton's goal, but by the fine body checks and wards of S. Hodge was transferred to Stevens' territory. Eleven minutes later the third goal was thrown by Richardson after a neat pass of R. Hodge, Egbert making a good check of the goal-keeper's stick. Stevens then took a brace and kept the ball in Princeton's part of the field. It was gradually worked to Stevens' goal, and the fourth goal thrown by R. Hodge. Five minutes later, by the splendid team work of Cook, Nicholson, Cowan, and Richardson, the fifth and last goal was thrown by Richardson. Both teams then seemed to liven up and good work was done, the ball continually crossing from goal to goal. The Stevens defence for the last 20 minutes was played with spirit, and their goal-keeper saved them a number of goals. Their attack had one or two throws at goal, but they were wild.

Princeton, 1. Druids, 3.

A drizzling rain spoiled the play of the game with the Druids on May 15, rendering dodging and quick throwing impossible. At the opening of the game Reese secured the ball, but almost immediately it was transferred to the territory of the home team. The Princeton attack played with the ball some little time despite the continual efforts of the Pennimans to recover it, and before the Princeton goal was threatened again R. Hodge obtained a good opportunity, and dodging by Simon, threw the ball past the Pennimans and Primrose, and scored a goal for Princeton. Time, 4 minutes. The rain now increased on the players, and it became more and more difficult for them to maintain a firm footing for running or even swift throwing—but Princeton's heavy-weights still had it much their own way, particularly in the centre field. The wonderful trippings of H. and W. Penniman constantly thwarted Princeton's attack as often as they seemed on the point of scoring on short throws. Longer throws from a "run-in" became impossible for the excessively slippery ground. The playing at the other end of the field was in contrast. Long throws from a pass were not infrequent, and the Druids' attack were only prevented from scoring again and again by the clever playing of S. Hodge and the phenomenal stopping of Princeton's goal-keeper, which may easily be called the feature of the game. After 14 minutes more McHenry scored the first goal for the Druids on a quick scoop. During the remainder of the hour no score was made. Ten minutes before time was up McLane made a swift shot for goal which was cleverly stopped by Hodge; the ball rebounded however to Frick, and he "tipped" it between the posts. Three minutes later McLane scored on a long throw from near centre field, and though the ball was checked by S. Hodge, it forced itself through the meshes of his crosse and gave the Druids their third goal.

Princeton, 1. Harvard, 3.

In the game of May 19, Harvard excelled in running, dodging and passing, much cool headwork being displayed during the game; Princeton, however, equalled or surpassed her in body-checking. Thirty seconds after the game began, by the good passing of R. Hodge and Cowan, Bliss was enabled to throw a goal for Princeton. For some time the ball stayed near Harvard's goal, then was transferred to Princeton's, where only the alertness of S. Hodge and the magnificent goal-keeping of H. Hodge kept Harvard from scoring. Each team was doing its utmost to score, but the careful, sure play of the defence at both goals made many throws but failures. Cook then made a series of beautiful runs for Princeton. Blodgett retaliated for Harvard, but by the perfect union of the play of S. Hodge and H. Hodge, Cowan got the ball, and by good running and body-checking carried it dangerously near Harvard's goal. It was quickly returned, and unsuccessful throws at goal were made by Hale, Blodgett, and Dudley. The Harvard defence at this point were playing an invincible game and were well supported by the almost perfect team play of their attack. Princeton failed to cover properly, and in 45 minutes after the start the first goal was thrown for Harvard by Gardner. After a rest of a few minutes, the ball was started and soon was in Princeton's territory. H. Hodge then gave a splendid exhibition of body-checking while struggling for the ball behind Princeton's goal. Several throws at goal were made and finally Hood was successful. Princeton seemed to lose courage now, and the men were pretty well played out. Harvard threw the third goal just 2 minutes before time was up. Princeton, though playing well, was fairly outclassed by Harvard.

Princeton, 3. New York University, 1.

Both teams played with vigor, the New York University playing a good game and keeping the ball well up to the enemy's goal. For 18 minutes the battle raged back and forth. Matthews, the University goal-keeper, played an excellent game and more than once saved his goal. The Princeton heavy-weights began to tell, and getting the ball down to the University posts forced it through, Blakemore being the winner of the goal. In the next game the New York boys did not play as well. Nicholson made a neat shot through the posts, adding another point to Princeton's score. Time, 10 minutes. The third game was hardly begun before it was finished. After the ball was faced, Princeton took it down to the University goal and Hodge put it through in 2 minutes. The fourth game showed some pretty play on both sides, Bliss securing the goal after some hard work. The fifth game turned the tables and New York University won the first goal in 2 minutes by a pretty shot from Schell near centre field to Bryan, who made the goal. The game was resumed for 14 minutes, when time was called and Princeton was declared victor.

Princeton, 2. New York, 3.

The final game was then played between the winners of the two former games, Princeton and New York. The ball was faced at 4:20 P.M.; Princeton defending the club-house goal. It soon became evident that the game would be stubbornly contested by each team. Two minutes the game continued, and although the New Yorkers were hardly as fresh as the Princetonnians, they kept the play in their opponents' ground, and McClain, who played a splendid game, managed to get the ball through the posts amid a shout of exultation. In the second game both teams played excellently, each side doing its utmost. The game then came down to the New York end, and a goal was almost immediately obtained by Bliss by a drop-in from Blakemore. Time, 10 minutes. The game became more and more exciting, the hoarse shouts of the field captains as they directed their team's play, being the only sound heard, so intent were the spectators watching the game. So the battle went on until Lennox made a smart pass to Meharg, who secured another goal—6 minutes. In the fourth game, after Princeton had so nearly made a goal as to hit the post, New York won another goal, some hard work and excellent play being made by both sides. Pryor made the goal, the time being 14 minutes. During this last game, Nicholson hurt his hand and withdrew, and the New York team dropped Hodge. The next goal was won by Princeton by a long shot by Blakemore in 14½ minutes. The game then resumed for several minutes, but just as the sun disappeared from view behind the hills, the stentorian voice of the referee called time and New York was declared the winner.

Princeton, 3. New York University, 1.

The ground was very slippery and many falls resulted. The ball was faced at a quarter past 5 P.M. and Princeton at once drove it down the field, to be returned by Roberts to McKelvey. His shot failed and then the same thing was repeated, and the shot was well stopped by H. Hodge. His long throw up the field gave Nicholson a chance and he accepted it, putting the ball neatly through the posts and scoring the first goal for Princeton. Time, 16 minutes. The second game was a repetition of the first, Blakemore sending the ball through from out of a scrimmage—15 minutes. Working as a unit, the New York team scored a goal from a pretty pass by H. Matthews to E. Tilton, who shot the ball between two Princeton men and through the posts—16 minutes. In the fourth game Princeton's heavy men in the attack field kept the ball close to New York University goal until Blakemore got it and made another goal for Princeton—13 minutes.

Princeton's defence, however, was playing a strong game, and soon sent the ball to the other end of the field, where their attack kept them dangerously near the Druids' goal, and finally C. Bliss, securing the ball, shot it through the posts, securing the first goal for Princeton after 13 minutes' play. When play was resumed, the Princeton attack immediately got the ball, and Nicholson, by a beautiful underthrow, scored the second goal, having received the ball by a pretty pass from Bonsal. Time, 2 minutes. Five minutes later Primrose tipped the ball to W. Penniman, who put it through the Princeton posts, and thus made the first goal for the Druids. In the early part of the second half, Nicholson secured Princeton's third and last goal by a good shot. The Druids now took a brace, and in quick succession Penniman and Symington secured goals and tied the score, and 8 minutes before the game stopped Penniman sent the ball to Pennington, who made a goal and won the most exciting and stubbornly contested game ever played by Princeton.

Princeton, 3. Druids, 4.

On October 29 the team went to Baltimore and were defeated by the Druids by a score of 4 to 3. The Druids, at first, forced the play and kept the ball near the Princeton goal. The adroit handling of their sticks and their skillful tipping of the ball from one to another were their noticeable excellences over Princeton's team.

The first championship game was played on April 27, with the New York University and resulted in a victory for Princeton by a score of 2 to 1. For the first 10 or 15 minutes the play was sharp and exciting, and marked by a prettily thrown goal by C. Bliss. The New York men then played better, and prevented any scoring for 20 minutes, when C. Bliss swiped another difficult goal. Soon afterward, R. Matthews threw the only goal for the New York University, and the last one of the game.

Princeton, 3. Druids, 2.

On May 7, Princeton defeated the Druids at Baltimore by a score of 3 to 2. This was the first time that Princeton ever defeated the Druids. After some scrimmaging and passing among Princeton's attack in the beginning of the game, Hodge ran in with the ball, securing a successful shot in front of goal after 7 minutes' play. After changing positions the Druids took a decided brace and pressed Princeton's defence until Penniman threw a goal after 10 minutes' playing. In the second half Hodge and Riggs changed places. It was evident that both teams were playing for all they were worth, and the excitement among the spectators became intense, every play being greeted with loud cheers. Fine runs, checks, and throws followed each other in quick succession, and it seemed as though a tie was inevitable. Five minutes before time was called, however, the Druids' goal was left uncovered, and a short pass and a swipe past goal-keeper by Knox, secured the decisive goal for Princeton.

Princeton, 0. New York, 6.

The lacrosse team met its first defeat in the game on May 14 with the New York team. The fact that Princeton was unable to score or to prevent so large a score shows that there were serious faults in their play. Throughout the game Princeton's defence was hard pressed, the New Yorks having little trouble in returning the ball when it was thrown toward their goal. Princeton was lucky in the toss up, but there their luck stopped. With the upper goal for their home goal, they found the ball at all times close to it, despite their effort to keep it at the down field sticks. From the first it was evident that the big Princetonians were football players in training and build, and entirely out of place in a game where finesse, cunning, and agility were demanded. In place of using the sticks to recover the ball from an antagonist, the college boys insisted upon making a regular football tackle, trying to rush down their opponents. In "feinting" or "jerking" the New Yorkers displayed the alertness of experts, and it was often amusing to see a 175-pound player in orange and black look bewildered as a 130-pound player in blue trunks and slippers hopped about him carrying the ball on his netted spoon. The visitors were very unsteady on their feet, and again and again they slipped on the smooth turf, which was very different from the hard gritty surface of their own home field. The first inning went in 2 minutes, and the New Yorkers had passed the ball down the field without any practical opposition to McClain, who put it to goal. The second inning went in 10 minutes, and was finished by Marsen in a clever throw (from the midst of a scrimmage. Once Bonsal, as goal-keeper, took a straight hard throw full on his chest and sent the ball back into centre field. The next two innings, in 9 and 12 minutes respectively, were taken by McClain after Popham had amused the spectators by some very clever feinting, while Pryor, in his modest hosey and mosquetaire gloves, disported himself in sprinting over the centre field. The fifth inning went after a 15 minutes' tussle by McClain passing the ball to Sears, who put it to goal. The visiting players were waking up, and once or twice it looked as though they would rush through a goal, but with each man playing his own game, all the merit of team work was lost. The last inning to fill out the hour of actual play was closed up in 5 minutes by Sears taking the ball at the right instant and passing to Matthews, who made a clever goal.

Princeton, 0. Harvard, 3.

On May 21 Harvard defeated Princeton by 3 to 0. Harvard presented the strongest team which had ever represented her, and probably Princeton did the same. The game throughout was most exciting, abounding in brilliant plays, passes, and dodges. The teams were about equal in strength, Harvard being most fortunate in her shots at goals, twice the ball bouncing in such a difficult manner through the posts that it was impossible for Bonsal to stop it. Princeton's whole team played with such vim and earnestness that it seemed more ill luck than their opponents' superiority that lost the game. The Harvard team excelled Princeton in "uncovering," and played entirely a "passing" rather than a "running" game. They seldom made shots at goals unless close in, while the Princeton men often shot at too great a distance. Harvard displayed more forethought in their play, while Princeton seemed slightly better trained. At the start the ball went to the Princeton defence and stayed around their goal for 15 minutes, but by good defence work of Cowan, Church, and Bonsal, no goal was made. The play was then transferred to Harvard's goal and several unsuccessful shots were made. For the next 20 minutes the Princeton attack had the ball most of the time, but were prevented from scoring by the good playing of Griffing and Drake. After 40 minutes of beautiful play the ball went to Dudley, uncovered, who by a good shot secured a goal. C. Bliss was hurt and had to leave the fields, Emans, '89, taking his place. The ball was again faced, and went alternately from goal to goal, when after 10 minutes Dudley scored the second goal. The third goal was made very quickly; the ball went to the Harvard attack from the face and was secured by Dudley again. He ran close in and threw the last goal. Although the Princeton men played desperately for the rest of the game and kept the ball, they were unable to score. When time was called Riggs had the ball and a clear shot at goal.

Princeton, 0. South Boston, 4.

Goals by McKellar, F. Cooper, White, and Walls.

The first game was on October 8 for the Oelrichs Cup at Staten Island Cricket Club at Livingston. Princeton played the South Bostons, one of the strongest teams in the country. As expected, Princeton showed the effects of only four days' practice, and the loss of Church and S. Hodge, consequently were defeated rather easily by the score of 4 to 0.

The Druids defeated Princeton on October 29 after a most exciting struggle. They were strengthened by Cohn and Riggs, '87, while the Princeton team was considerably weakened by the loss of Hodge, Church, Bliss, and Knox. Princeton, nevertheless, played a strong, aggressive game, forcing the play and keeping the ball most of the time.

In the game with Rutgers on April 25 Princeton won easily, 5 to 1. The field was both rough and swift, and dotted occasionally with a post or stump which prevented any very excellent playing.

Princeton, 5. Rutgers, 0.

Goals by Bliss, Segur, Knox, Poe.

On May 2 Rutgers was again defeated. They showed great improvement over their playing of last week, and especially excelled in their running; however, they were unable to dodge and secure the ball in a scrimmage or retain it, and as a result the ball was continually in the hands of the Princeton attack. Princeton did not play as sharp a game as they are capable of doing, and were criticised for bunching too much in front of their opponents' goal.

Princeton, 3. Lehigh, 1.

In the game against Lehigh at Allentown several men were injured, Bliss breaking his thumb. The game was played in a hard rain. After 15 minutes Lehigh gained a goal, arousing great excitement among the large number of students that had driven over from Bethlehem. Hodge had already thrown two goals for Princeton, and 6 minutes afterward Bonsal threw the third.

Princeton, 0. Druids, 2.

On May 16, Princeton played the Druids in Baltimore and was defeated by 2 to 0. The game was exciting throughout, and had not the Princeton attack been weakened by the loss of two of their best men the result would probably have been different. W. B. R. Penniman of the Druids succeeded in scoring a goal near the end of each half. The defence played a strong game, while the goal-keeping of S. Hodge was marvellous. When the game was half over, Emans was injured somewhat, and the Druids retired H. Penniman to make the sides equal.

Princeton, 2. Harvard, 1.

The final game in the championship series was won from Harvard on May 23. From first to last it was close and exciting. The game was Princeton's almost from the start, the ball being kept almost constantly near Harvard's goal. The good work of their goal-keeper, together with the bunching of their defence about the goal prevented Princeton from running up a larger score. Harvard had comparatively few shots at the Princeton goal—the only goal they made being a long pass from centre which rolled through the goal. Despite the fact that several men on the Princeton team were in bad condition from recent injuries, the team as a whole played with great snap and vigor, and seemed under perfect control of the captain. Poe's phenomenal dodging, running, and invariable success in getting the ball in a scrimmage were the chief features of the game. The playing of the whole team was excellent, and their victory brought the championship back to Princeton after four years' absence. Ten seconds after the ball was faced, Poe secured it and passed it to Bonsal, who threw a goal. After 15 minutes' sharp playing, Wells, of Harvard, threw the ball in from centre, which by a strange mishap rolled through the goal. The game then remained a tie until toward the end of the first hour, when Paxton, by a remarkably neat play, scored the second goal, after which Princeton played mainly a defensive game, keeping the ball well outside of Princeton's territory.

The annual fall lacrosse game with the Druids in Baltimore, October 17, resulted in a victory for Princeton by steady play. The passing of the attack and the defence was especially good. Shortly after the game was called it was soon carried well down toward the Druids' goal, and after a few passes was sent through by Paxton's good dodge and throw. Princeton had the ball most of the time for the remainder of the half, but no goals were scored. The second half opened with Paxton throwing another goal.

Princeton vs. Berkeley Athletics.

At Berkeley Oval, October 27, 1888.

Princeton, 1. Berkeley, 1.

The team which met Princeton on October 20 consisted of representatives from the New Yorks, Staten Islands, Brooklyn Athletics, and Berkeley Athletics. Notwithstanding the strength of the opposing twelve, Princeton kept them from scoring, although she failed to score herself. Early in the spring lacrosse began to be talked of, and every effort was made to retain the lacrosse championship so splendidly won from Harvard the previous season. Coming as it did at the close of a year of reverses, both on the football field and diamond, such as was without a parallel in Princeton's athletic history, the victory was especially welcome. In no branch of athletics were Princeton's prospects brighter. There seemed to be a revival of enthusiasm and greater determination. Princeton's most formidable opponent, Harvard, was weakened by the loss of all but four of her old men. But Princeton's championship team also has suffered a severe loss in the graduation of Hodge, Church, Blackwell, Talcott, Bliss, and Nicholson.

Goals by Riggs, 2; Poe, 2; Bonsal, 2; Paxton, 2; McCord, 1; Voorhees, 1.

The Rutgers game was very one-sided. Princeton's playing was far from good, especially the passing and catching. Four goals were made in the first half and six in the last.

In the game with the Druids, on May 4, the Druids' play was characterized by splendid team play and accurate passing and calculating. Princeton's playing was not up to the usual standard, the attack in particular doing wretched work. They attempted no passing whatever, each man seeming to be working for himself. They also were unable to either catch the ball or pick it up quickly. The defence, however, did very well; the only fault to find with them was that they did not stick close enough to their men, and also failed sometimes to get in their throws.

Princeton, 3; Harvard, 1.

The last game of the championship series was played on Saturday, May 18, at Cambridge, and Princeton won by a score of 3 to 1. For the second season Princeton owned the championship pennant. This was the first time that Princeton ever defeated Harvard on its own grounds. From the start it was evident that Princeton had the best of it, and not more than three minutes had elapsed before Browning secured the ball and passed it to Riggs, who made a neat throw and scored the first goal. The teams changed goals, and after a sharp fight for 10 minutes, Browning succeeded in swiping the ball through the posts. Harvard braced up wonderfully after this and kept the ball well from her goal. A long and hard scrap now took place, lasting for 30 minutes, until Poe got the ball on a pass from Paxton, and secured the third goal. Then there was a rest for 10 minutes, which every one needed badly as the heat was terrific. When the ball was again faced, Towle got it, and in less than a minute got the first goal for Harvard. In the remaining 10 minutes neither team scored. Both teams played well, but Princeton excelled in team play and throwing. The attack uncovered beautifully, while the throwing of the defence was splendid.

Princeton, 0. Druids, 3.

On June 18, the Druids of Baltimore came to Princeton and played a strong game against the Princeton men, some of whom had been out of training. After 33 minutes' play, the Druids threw their first goal. On the second half only 5 minutes had passed when they secured their second. The last goal was made just before time was called, and the score stood 3 to 0.

Princeton, 1. Brooklyn, 2.

The lacrosse season opened on April 12 with a game on the 'Varsity Field with the Brooklyn Athletic Club. Owing to the failure of two of Brooklyn's men to show up, the game was played with eleven men on a side, Farr, '90, playing defence for Brooklyn. In the first half neither side scored, though the ball was most of the time in Princeton's territory. In the second half, after a few minutes of sharp play, the first goal was thrown for Brooklyn, from Dent to O'Brien. After a few more minutes of play, O'Brien got the ball again and running in threw the second goal for Brooklyn. Just a minute before time was called Princeton secured her only goal by a long pass of Riggs to McIlvaine, who succeeded in sending the ball through the posts.

On April 19 the team met the Staten Island Athletic Club. The playing of the defence was very strong, but the attack, unaccustomed to playing on a heavy turf, fumbled the ball a great deal, while they indulged also in too long passes.

Goals by Lanier, J. Poe, Poe, '84, Y. Symington.

In the game with the Druids on May 3, the fact that the Druids held the championship of America seemed to influence Princeton's play from the start, and the snap and quickness which constitute such a large part of good lacrosse playing were almost entirely wanting. The slow passing of Princeton's attack could make no headway against the Druid defence, and the ball was missed and fumbled a great deal too much. The throwing of the defence of Princeton was much below their usual standard, the ball frequently being thrown far out on the sides instead of coming straight for the goal.

Throughout the whole Stevens game there was apparent a great lack of systematic play; the defence were slow in covering their men, while their throwing was wild. In the attack individual playing was too noticeable. For the first few minutes the play was very spirited, neither side scoring, but Stevens after the first half-hour seemed to lose their snap and Princeton scored frequently.

Princeton, 3. Johns Hopkins, 2.

The Johns Hopkins game was one of the closest and most exciting games ever played in Princeton. The throwing of Princeton was poor, straight throws being few and far between, while the covering up was by no means what it should be. In the attack, the men played too much individually, and did not seem to know what to do with the ball when they obtained it. There was little passing and too many long shots for goal were attempted. At the start the ball was immediately carried into Hopkins' territory, when, after several minutes of aggressive play, Phinizy succeeded in throwing the first goal of the game. Princeton then slackened in her play and Hopkins secured a goal by a rolling ball from Friedenwald, which was followed a little later by another from a beautiful catch and throw by Lanier. Brilliant plays by both sides now became frequent, and six minutes before the half was up Riggs, by pretty passing on the attack, secured the ball and scored Princeton's second goal. After a rest of 5 minutes play was resumed, and for a while it looked as if neither side would score again. Riggs, however, made the third and winning goal for Princeton.

Princeton, 1. Lehigh, 3.

For the first 20 minutes of the game with Lehigh on May 24 Princeton played with snap and vigor, the attack getting the ball and passing well, but after a half-hour's play Lehigh took a decided brace and their superior endurance began to tell. Lehigh played a hard, determined game and clearly outclassed Princeton in their running and dodging. The weakening of Princeton's play after the first half can be accounted for only by the short time allowed for practice, because they were compelled to relinquish the grounds to the baseball men at 1 o'clock and thereby got but 35 minutes' daily practice. Within 10 minutes' play the first goal was secured for Princeton by good passes from Poe to McLaren, to Phinizy, who sent the ball through the posts. For the next 15 minutes it seemed as if Princeton would certainly score again, the ball being forced time after time close to Lehigh's goal only to be lost in the scrimmages. But at the end of the first half-hour Lehigh succeeded in scoring by a lucky shot of Gjirtsen, and this seemed to put new life in their play. Until 15 minutes of the end the score stood 1 to 1, but in the remaining time Lehigh scored twice on throws by Cope and Semple, and thus secured the championship.

E. A. S. Lewis, '91, N. Y., President.
Bowdre Phinizy, '92, Ga., Treasurer.
E. A. Poe, '91, Md., Captain.

The College at large had been showing less and less interest in lacrosse, and in December, 1890, it was decided at a mass meeting to drop lacrosse from the Athletic Association because the sport appealed to only a few, and its value as a training school for the other sports had been overestimated; or, perhaps the very fact that it was not considered an independent sport but a training school, killed it.

The baseball and track athletes were using the field constantly, and the consequent loss of practice of the lacrosse team led to defeats by such small colleges as Lehigh. The last game played by the team was with Lawrenceville on May 15, 1890, and Lawrenceville won 4 to 0.

In April, 1893, an attempt was made to reorganize the Lacrosse Association. Only one game, however, was played before the sport was finally abandoned. On May 10, Princeton was defeated by Stevens Institute by the score of 4 to 2. Kenyon made both the Princeton goals. For Stevens, McCord threw two, and Hutchinson and Maynard one each.

CRICKET.

Cricket was played at Princeton in the fall of 1857, and for several years the sport prospered, despite the prediction of the Lit that "the college authorities would stop it, as there was something wicket in it." The Nassau Cricket Club was formed by some students from Philadelphia, and the following officers were elected :

| C. Van Rensselaer, Jr., '58           |                      |

The men practised an hour every day in the old field where Little Hall is now, but they were never able to arrange any matches because they could not find twenty-two men in College sufficiently interested to play. A single report of one of their "best games" is on record as follows :

| First Side.        | Second Side.           |

But the sport was not very popular ; the noon hour was too short for a game and the fielders grew impatient, for every player wanted to bowl or bat. The few who played became so proficient that one of the men writes : "We could have picked out an eleven in 1859-1860 that would have stood up against any team in the country." Their practice was very thorough, for they were all trying to develop themselves into good bowlers and batsmen. They tried the most difficult work ; for instance, single stump, defended by a face bat, the bowler allowed to throw the ball. This insured absolute accuracy with the bat. The year of 1862-1863 witnessed a revival in cricket when S. B. Huey, '63, became captain, and several matches were played with the Philadelphia teams, but unfortunately, the only record of these, a diary, has been lost. In the fall of 1863, the class of '67 brought many cricketers to Princeton, prominent among whom were F. S. Katzenbach and W. H. Katzenbach. When college opened in August, 1864, the thirty members elected the following officers and team :

- |  |                     |

The wickets were pitched at noon, the University of Pennsylvania going to the bat. Their last wicket fell with a score of 34. The Nassaus followed, running up a score of 40. The University of Pennsylvania scored 106 on their second inning. The Nassaus felt that they were beaten because the Philadelphia men played a stronger game. When the Nassaus took their second inning they struggled to kill time, and they succeeded so well that they had only scored 21 with four wickets down, when it became so late that the umpires decided to call the game a draw and to adjourn to the banquet at the Mansion House. The game was then decided on the first inning, and of course, this gave the victory to the Nassaus. In the same spring two games were played at Lambertville, N. J., with the Delaware Cricket Club, and both resulted in the defeat of the Nassaus. The following is the score of the first game:

Unfortunately the team had played themselves into debt, and for eight years cricket was dropped from the list of organized sports at Princeton. The club continued in a state of bankruptcy until 1874, when there were enough students who liked the game to reorganize the old club; and on September 11, 1874, the Nassau Cricket Club was reorganized with the following officers :

- F. Marquand, '70, President.
- J. Armstrong, '77, Vice-President.
- R. W. Johnson, '76, Treasurer.
- B. Henry, '76, Secretary.
- S. M. Miller, '75, Field Captain.

On October 24 the second eleven of the Merion Cricket Club came to Princeton and were defeated by the Nassaus, greatly to the surprise of the undergraduates, who had guyed the few men that had practised.

There are no records of any matches in the year ending June, 1876, but the club was in a very prosperous condition with a large membership, and, strange to say, a surplus of money in the treasury. On October 16, the eleven went to Germantown to play the second eleven of the Young America Cricket Club, but they were compelled to postpone the match indefinitely on account of the heavy rain.

So little interest was shown in the sport in 1878 that the make-up of the first eleven was never completed, and the only contests were a few practice games at the noon recess. In the following year no attempt was made to reorganize the club, despite the kind offer of assistance from the St. George's Cricket Club of New York. In 1880 there seemed to be a slight revival of interest in the game, and the following executive committee endeavored unsuccessfully to carry on the organization of the club :

A. B. Duncan, '80 ; H. D. Wilcox, '82 ; G. Westervelt, '82.

On February 3, 1881, a mass meeting was held in the interest of cricket, which resulted in the reorganization of the club with the following officers :

J. B. Shober, '82, President.
 F. S. Conover, '83, Captain.
 D. P. Morgan, '83, Sec'y and Treas.

Only one game was played, which resulted in a close victory for the Nassaus.

After this the club dwindled away, no regular practice was kept up, and only a few men owned bats and balls. Since then no attempt has been made to reorganize a cricket club, though on one or two occasions, even as recently as 1899, some of the students from Philadelphia have gone to Philadelphia, presumably as a Princeton eleven, to be beaten by some junior or second eleven of the Philadelphia clubs. Probably the sport will never be revived at Princeton, for the class of men who played cricket formerly are now absorbed in the enticing game of golf.

LAWN TENNIS.

Lawn tennis was introduced into Princeton in 1877, when a few students received permission to put up a net on the back campus. There was no organization until the spring of 1882. At first the club was associated with a town club and used the courts in the field at the foot of Chambers Street. About five years ago the college club decided to lay out courts in the field back of Brown Hall. Gradually these courts became crowded, and in 1899 the present courts on Brokaw Field were laid out through the liberality of J. W. Alexander, '60.

In 1883 the Intercollegiate Lawn Tennis Association was formed, but Princeton did not enter until the second year. Since then Princeton has been represented in every tournament except that in 1887. The first Princetonian, however, to win first prize was S. G. Thomson, '98, who won the championship in 1897. In the last tournament in 1900, Princeton won both the singles and doubles.

SHOOTING.

In the early spring, or the fall, the little jerky train that puffs its noisy way up from Princeton Junction is often stopped at Penn's Neck, and visitors are surprised to see several students board the train, clad in dirty hunting suits with double-barrelled guns on their shoulders. They have been hunting, and if lucky, they have killed a few small birds or frogs, or maybe a chipmunk. But twenty-five years ago when the railroad was new and the college smaller, those students who went out hunting were often fortunate enough to bring home a bagful of small game. The hills, meadows, and swamps about Princeton furnished good cover, and a few students enjoyed some good recreation in hunting. In the spring of 1876 the Forest and Stream advocated an Intercollegiate Rifle Match, offering a prize valued at five hundred dollars; but the offer was not accepted. At Princeton the Faculty were strongly opposed to the use of firearms by the students. Nevertheless, in May, 1877, the students who loved the sport organized the first gun club at Princeton with the following officers:

H. S. Johnson, '78, President.
Frank Presbrey, '79, Secretary.

Their chief aim was to encourage field shooting and prevent the breaking of the game laws. The club received little support, however, and was soon abandoned. Five years later, in the spring of 1882, there was a sudden and vigorous revival of interest in shooting that led to the formation of a Princeton College Rifle Club, and a Glass Ball Shooting Club. The following year the Gun and Kennel Club was organized. The interest, however, was unstable. The classes of 1885, 1887, and 1888 maintained active gun clubs, and in the year 1888 the class of 1891 formed its club, which was gradually broadened into the University Gun Club. In 1892 Princeton accepted the invitation of the Yale Club to a match shoot with Yale and Harvard, which Princeton finally won. Since then Princeton has been represented in the Annual Intercollegiate Shoots, winning the championship in the spring of 1894, and in the fall of 1895, and of 1897. It was in this shoot just mentioned that Princeton won permanent possession of the trophy cup offered by Forest and Stream. In March, 1898, representatives from Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Columbia, and Pennsylvania formed an Intercollegiate Shooting Association to promote intercollegiate shooting contests. It was determined to hold two contests each year, in May and in November. At the second contest in November, 1899, B. F. Elbert, '03, won the individual championship.

GOLF.

In the fall of 1895, the Princeton Golf Club was formed by the faculty, alumni, and undergraduates with the following officers: M. Taylor Pyne, '77, President; A. Marquand, '74, Vice-President; P. A. V. Van Doren, '79, Secretary and Treasurer.

A nine-hole course was laid out in the large field to the north-west of Princeton, known as "Stockton Woods." After a year's practice, an intercollegiate association was formed and the first tournament was held in May, 1897, in which L. P. Bayard, Jr., '98, won the Individual Championship. In the fall of 1897, Mrs. M. Taylor Pyne gave the club a handsome silver loving cup which is contested for each year, but remains in the possession of the club. In addition, Mrs. Pyne gave two pewter cups for first and second prizes in the Pyne Cup Tournament of 1897. They were won by W. D. Vanderpool, '98, and A. D. Childs, '01. In the fall of 1899, P. R. Pyne, '03, won the Individual Intercollegiate Championship, defeating Averill of Harvard. The golf club purchased the old Stockton farm of 240 acres that extends from the Theological Seminary to Stony Brook, and from the water tower to the canal. An eighteen-hole course has been laid out and the class of 1886 will erect a commodious club house as a class memorial. This gives Princeton the finest golf college course in the United States.

In the spring of 1900, C. C. Cuyler, '79, gave the club a beautiful trophy cup to be contested for each year at commencement by representatives of the graduates and undergraduates.

BICYCLING.

The first recorded bicycle race at Princeton was the one-mile race in the Fall Handicap Games on November 5, 1879. In the following spring a two-mile bicycle race was added to the list of events of the Caledonian and of the Intercollegiate Games. In the latter Princeton won first place. To encourage better training, a Bicycle Club was formed in 1880, which seemed to thrive for five years, then the Club was absorbed by the Track Athletic Association.

In the spring of 1899 it was decided to withdraw the bicycle events from the programme of the Intercollegiate Games, and to form an independent Intercollegiate Bicycle Association which should hold annual bicycle meets. For the same reasons a Bicycle Association, independent of the Athletic Association, was formed at Princeton with the following officers:

- J. L. Davis, '00, Manager
- H. A. Smith, '01, Assistant Manager.
- B. Ripley, '01, Captain.

In 1899 the Intercollegiate Championship was won by Yale; in 1900 by Princeton.

THE MINOR SPORTS.

Cross-country running is one of the minor sports which has been recently revived in Princeton. As early as 1880 the members of the Senior Class formed the "Princeton Hare and Hounds Club." At first the members held local runs, but in the spring of 1881 they became more ambitious and challenged Columbia for a twelve-mile run. This, however, was not accepted, and Princeton was not represented in an intercollegiate cross-country run until November, 1899, when the First Intercollegiate Cross-Country Meet was held at Morris Park, New York City. Cornell won the team championship, but J. Cregan, '99, won the individual championship in the fast time of 34 minutes 5½ seconds. J. M. Perry, '03, was eighth; time, 36 minutes 14 seconds. G. A. Chamberlain, '02, fifteenth; time, 37 minutes 15 seconds.

Cornell won the Second Intercollegiate Cross-Country Meet in December, 1901, in which Princeton did not get a place, for only three Princeton men crossed the line. W. M. McCoy, '04, W. B. Mount, '01, and J. R. Crawford, '01.

In 1881 the "Nassau Hare and Hounds Club" was formed with forty members, and P. Van Dyke, '81, won the trophy for the best individual record. In 1882 H. L. Baldwin, '84, won it; in 1883 S. L. Marshal, '84, in 1884 H. L. Baldwin, '84. Then the interest in the sport seemed to die out until the fall of 1888 when the class of '91 organized their club. The following is the report for the year ending May, 1889:

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| Number of members, . . . . .              | 37       |
| Average number of men in a run, . . . . . | 11       |

| Shortest " . . . . .                      | 2 " "    |
| Average " . . . . .                       | 5 " "    |
| Average time per mile, . . . . .          | 7½ min.  |

J. S. Roddy, '91, won the gold medal offered by James Robinson, and silver cups were awarded to G. B. Agnew, '91, S. Wasson, '91, and F. W. Propst, '91. In the fall of 1890 the class clubs were abandoned and a club of "University Harriers" was formed. Very little interest was manifested, and the organization had to be revived every other year until finally the management of the cross-country runs has passed into the hands of the Track Association.

The past three years have witnessed the inauguration of many sports at Princeton. For instance, in 1897 the Hockey Club was formed, but Princeton has been handicapped by warm winters and no rinks. During the winter of 1900-1901 the following games were played:

M. W. Forney, '01—Captain.

Although these minor sports are doing much to develop the students and the athletes they have not yet won a permanent place in college life and do not merit a more detailed record. They may meet the fate of the many sports that enjoyed a period of brief popularity at Princeton in the past. For instance, in 1876, and in 1891 also, there were well-organized Fencing Clubs. In 1877 a Skating Club was organized. In 1886 the Senior Class organized a Polo Team. In 1890 and 1891 came the Riding Club, and the Canoe Club. Most of these were the survivals of vacation or school recreations, and were allowed to dwindle away as the duties of college life increased. Others afforded a temporary vent for the overflowing energy of the students that soon sought new channels. A few like the Sparring Club of 1885 have been squelched by college law. Others were maintained for "horse play" like the Izaak Walton Fishing Club which was formed in 1879, and maintained a precarious existence until 1886.

Such were the minor sports of the past ; those of the present are little different, and new ones will be introduced in the future, for the motives that lead to their establishment will be found in the coming generation of students. Their emotional nature will seek satisfaction in wholesome social exercise ; some will seek relief from mental toil, and others will desire mere physical development. Of course there is danger of over-organization and the lack of concentrated effort and interest, but these minor sports ought to be encouraged, for they meet a demand, even if temporary, of the student life and help to raise the standard of college work. The benefits they bestow far outweigh the time and energy consumed.

APPENDIX A.

PRINCETON-HARVARD FOOTBALL CONTROVERSY OF 1889.

All discussion of this controversy has been purposely omitted from the body of this history. In order, however, that all Princeton men may know the truth concerning this important conflict, the following official correspondence is reprinted from a supplement to the Daily Princetonian of March 7, 1890. This was, in a measure, issued for private circulation and every effort was made to keep the statement from the public press, for throughout the whole of the negotiations Princeton maintained an attitude of high dignity and refused to discuss publicly the unpleasant occurrences. The supplement is as follows:

THE OFFICIAL STATEMENTS OF BOTH COLLEGES.

We publish in full the statements made by the Harvard Athletic Committee in reply to Princeton's letter of November 17, 1889, and the counter-reply of February 18, 1890, sent to Harvard by the Graduate Advisory Committee and Football Management of Princeton. We present the two positions in this controversy as represented in the official statement of each side, believing that Princeton will in no wise suffer by thus submitting the case, and leaving the candid mind to form its judgment from the evidence adduced. The Princeton reply has necessarily been conditioned upon receipt of the Harvard statement and the delay in its appearance has been caused by the Christmas vacation and the mid-year examinations, with the work incident thereupon.

The public nature which this discussion has already assumed is deprecated by Princeton as being detrimental to the best interests of college athletics, and therefore the Graduate Advisory Committee and Football Management expressly desire that no use of the Princeton statement, either in whole or in part, be made by the public press.

HARVARD'S REPLY.

PRINCETON'S CHARGES REFUTED.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF HARVARD'S POSITION BY THE ATHLETIC COMMITTEE.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
CAMBRIDGE, MASS., Dec. 18, 1889.

To the Faculty Committee on Outdoor Sports, Princeton College:

GENTLEMEN:

We have received from the President and Treasurer of the Princeton Football Association an "official statement" dated Nov. 27, 1889, in regard to the Princeton and Harvard Elevens for the present year. This statement contains—

First, a "Faculty certificate" that all the members of the Princeton Eleven are "bona fide students on the rolls" of Princeton College or University.

Secondly, the certificate of Professor Sloane, a member of the Committee on Outdoor Sports, that no member of the Eleven is in any way a "beneficiary of the college."

Thirdly a declaration made by the officers of the Princeton Football Team ("without any qualification whatever,") and certified by Professor Sloane as true "to the best of his knowledge and belief," that no member of the Eleven has been benefited in any pecuniary or business way by belonging to the team.

Fourthly, an allegation that the officers of the Princeton Association have in their possession "evidence that a number of the Harvard Eleven were offered pecuniary inducements to enter college to play football, and are at present beneficiaries of the college funds." A "portion" of this evidence was enclosed to us, but was not published by the officers of the Princeton Association with the statement.

Fifthly, the request that "since the Harvard Football Association has publicly based its withdrawal from the league upon the charge that Princeton defeated Harvard with a team partly composed of paid and irregular players the Harvard Football Association make a public retraction of the general charges made against the Princeton management."

We need not further specify the contents of the "official statement," since the whole appeared in the public prints some days before we received it, and has been the subject of much public discussion.

Under ordinary circumstances any statement of the officials of the Princeton Football Association in regard to the constitution of their team would have been transmitted by us to the officers of the Harvard Association, with the request that they make answer. But since the communication of the Princeton Association contains grave public charges against one of the athletic organizations over which the Committee has supervision, we have undertaken to examine the evidence transmitted to us and also such other evidence as we could discover. This letter, which we beg leave to address to you, states the results of our investigations; and explains the present attitude of Harvard students towards intercollegiate athletic contests. Since the public has been led to believe in the existence of "evidence" too damaging for publication, affecting the character of "a number of the Harvard team;" and since the attitude of the Harvard students has been seriously misunderstood and misrepresented, you will not regard us as discourteous if we give the public full opportunity to compare the evidence with the facts.

We shall consider the five parts of the Princeton statement in order.

I. THE ACADEMIC STATUS OF THE PRINCETON PLAYERS.

We beg leave at the outset to correct a misapprehension on the part of the officers of the Princeton Football Association. The officers of our Association do not doubt that the members of the Princeton team are all duly registered students in Princeton College or University. Instead of establishing this uncontested fact, the Princeton Association should have explained how it happened that two members of the Princeton team, Mr. Cash and Mr. George, were so late, the one in entering and the other in returning to college. The latter is now an instructor in a large preparatory school, and resumed connection with Princeton as a graduate student several weeks after the work of the year had begun. The other entered Princeton College for the first time, as a special student, only a short time before the Princeton-Harvard game on November 10, which was the first game in which either of them played. The natural, although perhaps mistaken, inference is that these gentlemen were brought to Princeton to play football. The inference is strengthened in the one case by the engrossing nature of the duties of an instructor in a large preparatory school; and in the other by the fact that the gentleman referred to is said on trustworthy authority, to have entered the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania in the autumn of 1888 for the purpose of becoming a member of the Eleven, and to have left it as soon as the football season was over. It is further strengthened by the admission of Captain Poe, published in the New York Evening Post of Nov. 2, in regard to a third player, Mr. Wagenhurst, who was lately a member of the New York professional Baseball Club: "We do not deny that the reason of his returning for a post-graduate course is to play football."

We cannot but regard it as contrary to the best interests of colleges and of college sport that players should return to college merely to engage in athletic contests. Last year there was a similar case at Harvard. So convinced was this Committee of the evils of the practice, that this year all candidates for the Eleven about whom any doubt was felt were sharply inquired about. The cases of five among thirty-one candidates were thus specially investigated. All of these gentlemen were and are "bona fide students on the rolls" of the University; against four of them efficient protest was lodged by this Committee or some other authority of the University; so that only one of them played in the games against Princeton and Yale.

2. THE QUESTION OF BENEFICIARY AID TO PRINCETON PLAYERS.

In this case, again, no one questions the certificate of Professor Sloane; and no one could have doubted that, had such aid been given, it would have been deserved, since conferred by the authorities of Princeton College. But the question of beneficiary aid—which, it should be noted, was first raised by the officers of the Princeton Association—is irrelevant. We are not aware that the receipt of beneficiary aid, earned by good scholarship and good conduct, has anywhere been held to render the recipient ineligible for membership of a crew, a nine, or an eleven. It would have been much more to the point to have presented the evidence in the "official statement" in refutation of the wide-spread opinion that three of the players put on the field by Princeton at the beginning of the year, two of whom played against Yale and Harvard, are professionals, and ineligible for any college team. One of these gentlemen, Mr. Ames, is currently reported to have received specific sums of money for his services on baseball teams at different times last summer in Chicago. At a meeting of the Advisory Committee held in New York on November 14, 1889, the Harvard delegate endeavored to have the true facts made known. The Princeton delegate objected on a point of order, and all investigation stopped. We have been shown a letter from a professor in Princeton College in which he says: "Although we deplore Ames's receipt of money on this occasion, this fact does not constitute professionalism, which is a habit." A second member of the team, Mr. George, has been since the beginning of the present college year, and is now, a salaried teacher of field sports and other subjects in a preparatory school. A third member, Mr. Wagenhurst, who played in the games in the early part of the season, including a championship game, has been a member of a professional baseball team. At a meeting of the Graduate Advisory Committee of the American Intercollegiate Football Association, held in New York on November 4, 1889, a rule was passed that no professional athlete should take part in any contest of the Association. This rule barred the members of the Princeton team referred to. The Princeton delegate alone voted against the passage of the rule. Most unfortunately for the best interests of college sports the statement sent us contains no reference to these three questionable cases.

In none of these cases do we consider the acceptance of money a reflection upon the character of these gentlemen; but we believe it to be a very serious detriment to amateur and to college sports that men who have voluntarily assumed the status of professionals should be received upon college teams. Since no protest against the reception of these men from within their own college has been made public, we feel that a different opinion prevailed at Princeton.

3. THE QUESTION OF OTHER PECUNIARY BENEFIT TO PRINCETON PLAYERS.

The statement sent us by the officials of the Princeton Association further says:

"No member of the eleven has received, either from us or from outside parties, to our knowledge, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary compensation, either as an inducement to enter Princeton or as an assistance while here. Neither have we entered into any form of promise to pay present or past expenses or to make future compensation in any way. Neither has any member of team benefited by any business arrangement while here."

This, however, can hardly represent the invariable attitude of the Princeton Football Association. We have been shown a letter addressed to a member of the present Harvard team by a prominent member of the Princeton team, who was formerly its captain. From this letter we take the following extracts:

"I told you when there that I thought we could get you a scholarship. I have since found that we can get one for you and also for any particular friend you may have. I can also get a club for you and a friend . . . In fact we can give you all that could be desired, I think."

And in another letter of Mr. Knowlton L. Ames to Mr. Stickney, published at the end of section 4 of this letter, he says:

"I will tell you plainly, I will do all I can for you in every way. . . . I can get your board, tuition, etc., free. The athletic men at Princeton get by all odds the best treatment in any of the colleges."

4. THE CHARGES AGAINST THE HARVARD TEAM.

The charges against the members of the Harvard team in the Princeton statement appear reducible to the following:

It is intimated that scholarships have been conferred by the Harvard Faculty in order to attract athletic men. In answer to this charge it is only necessary to state, if indeed any statement is necessary, that all scholarships in Harvard University are conferred by special votes of a Faculty of the Academic Council, and confirmed by the Corporation; and that in both bodies the only grounds of bestowal are good scholarship and need. It should be perhaps added, in specific answer to the allegation that "a number of the Harvard Eleven are at present beneficiaries of the college funds," that only one member of the Harvard team is the recipient of beneficiary aid from the college. He holds one of the eighty-nine grants of the "Price-Greenleaf Aid" for the current year, the only form of undergraduate scholarship which is granted in advance. The assignment was made by the President and Dean of the College upon the written recommendation of the teachers under whom the applicant was then studying in one of the largest New England academies, and was made on precisely the same basis as all other assignments to boys in the same and other schools, namely, indigence and good promise.

It is further asserted that a number of the Harvard Eleven were offered pecuniary inducements to enter college to play football. "Evidence" is presented in support of this assertion. This "evidence" consists of two letters, two extracts from letters, one of which was not addressed to the officers of the Princeton Association, but appeared in the public press, a reference to a fifth letter which is not produced, and finally reference to the trip to England made last summer by a baseball team consisting of seven collegians under the charge of J. W. Spalding, of New York.

It may here be said that the Secretary of this Committee wrote to the President of the Princeton Football Association on December 3, requesting that all the evidence in his possession be sent to us. Particular request was made that a copy of Mr. Upton's letter referred to in the "evidence" should be sent. Mr. Miller wrote on December 13 that the person holding this letter refused to surrender it on account of its private character. This gentleman was then authorized by Mr. Upton by telegraph to make its contents known. We have not received it. We send you a copy of all the evidence submitted to us.

It is specially charged in the "evidence" that officers of the Harvard Football Association made offers of money to members of last year's Andover team. The only support to this assertion is found in the following, which we repeat here verbatim:—

"ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Nov. 25, 1889.

"To President P. U. F. B. A.:

"DEAR SIR:—Messrs. Sears and Cumnock, speaking to the Andover team last fall, offered any man who would come to Harvard and get on their team, their expenses through college. I myself was absent, but was told by the members of our team, one of whom is now playing on Harvard's team.

"SMITH MOWRY."

The second is an extract from the letter of L. D. Mowry, a former Andover player:

"Upton told me that Sears and Cumnock told him, and for that matter the whole Andover team, that it would not cost them a cent if they would go to Harvard and get on the team. Joe Dennison told me that Sears said that if he would try for the team and get on he would see that it would not cost him (J. D.) anything; if it cost Harvard five hundred dollars ($500) it would be all right. They would stand the cost."

There is no positive testimony here whatever in support of the serious charge against Mr. Sears and Mr. Cumnock. Neither correspondent himself heard them make the offer alleged, but each reports the fact on hearsay.

In rebuttal we present letters in which the charge is contradicted in every particular by the statements of every person mentioned who is accessible. Mr. Cumnock says:

"I have never made any offer of pecuniary aid to any person, to become or to remain a member of the Harvard team, and such offers have not, to my knowledge, been made by any member of the Harvard Football Association. . . . The whole charge is false and without foundation from beginning to end."

Mr. Upton says:

"I did not state to Mr. D. L. Mowry or to any other person that money offers of any kind had been made to me or to other members of the Andover team. No such offers have ever been made to me."

Mr. Dennison says:

"The extract is false from beginning to end. . . . I was never offered any inducement to play on the team either by Mr. Sears. . . . or anybody else."

Mr. Sears is absent in Europe. We have written to him, and his answer will be at your disposal, if you so desire, when it arrives.

The testimony, further, is invalidated by errors of circumstance, as is shown by Mr. Cumnock's letter. He and Mr. Sears did not go to Andover "in the fall," but in the following March; they did not see the Andover team, but only three members of it. It is probable the Messrs. Mowry, whom we believe to be honorable men, have accepted vague rumors running through the school, and have become confused as to their source. The visit of Messrs. Sears and Cumnock was made, not of course to extend offers of financial aid, but to present the legitimate attractions of the College to men whom they wished to interest.

The next charge in support of the statement "that the Harvard management have offered pecuniary aid to players" is that offers of money were made to Mr. Ammerman of the University of Pennsylvania. In proof of this the "evidence" offers an extract from a letter of Mr. Ammerman, published in the Philadelphia Press on Nov. 26, 1889, as follows:

"Inducements of the character mentioned, a scholarship and pecuniary compensation, a ticket to Boston, etc., were extended to me by a Harvard man early in November, to enter the Law School at Harvard and become a member of the Harvard Nine and Football Eleven."

Mr. Linn, the captain of the Harvard Nine, says in the letter printed herewith: "I have not made and no one has been authorized by me to make any offer whatsoever to Mr. Ammerman or anybody else." Mr. Cumnock also makes denial for the Football Association. Mr. Ammerman, further, designates the person who solicited him as simply 'a Harvard man,' whose official connection with the Harvard Association, he says, in the full text of the letter published herewith, he is unable to give. He refuses to confirm the rumor that this person was "a prominent Harvard baseball official."

We find it difficult to weigh the value of Mr. Ammerman's statement, inasmuch as he declines to give any additional information. A member of this Committee, on seeing the original report of this transaction in the New York Herald of Nov. 16, wrote to Mr. Ammerman, requesting further explanation. Mr. Ammerman accepted the letter, but has made no reply. The alleged offer would constitute so serious an offence against good morals and college discipline that we regret Mr. Ammerman has not seen fit to be more explicit. It seems likely that Mr. Ammerman has been imposed upon. It is extremely improbable that any "Harvard man" would have had the temerity to offer him a scholarship in the Law School. These scholarships—eight in number—are assigned in October, and are given only to those who have been a year in residence and have passed with credit the annual examinations in June preceding.

The "evidence" further contains a letter written on April 11, 1889, by Mr. Stickney, who played on the Harvard Eleven this autumn, to Mr. Knowlton L. Ames at Princeton. The only part of this letter—which we print in full herewith—which can possibly be adduced as evidence in support of the charge against the officers of the Harvard Association, is the following extract:

"I am now tutoring at Cambridge with the idea of entering Harvard, and Cumnock thinks I am going to enter sure next year, but they don't seem to want to do much for me."

The following was the reply to Mr. Stickney's letter, which we print in full. It is not included in the Princeton "evidence:"—

"Princeton, N. J., April 16, 1889.

DEAR MR. STICKNEY:—Was very glad to get your letter. I was away on our spring baseball trip, or your letter would have received a prompt reply. As to your coming down here, I will tell you plainly, I will do all I can for you in every way, if you really wish to come. I can get you board, tuition, etc., free. The athletic men at Princeton get by all odds the best treatment in any of the colleges. I would like to talk it over with you personally. If you will accept an invitation from me to come down and spend Sunday—say to one of our Yale games. If you will do this it shall be at my expense; I am talking to you with full confidence, Mr. Stickney, that if you do come down it will be to judge the question on its merits. I shall be very glad to have you accept this invitation and shall do all I can to give you an idea of our life. We have had so many men down here already with athletic goods that I think it would be useless for you to come down solely to sell your athletic goods. Choose your own time for coming.

"Yours sincerely,
KNOWLTON L. AMES."

Mr. Stickney's letter affirms that at Cambridge they were not willing to do much for him. Mr. Ames writes from Princeton that he will do all he can in every way, and that he can get him his board, tuition, etc., free; adding that athletic men can get by all odds better treatment at Princeton than in any other of the colleges. The precise nature of the assistance received by Mr. Stickney at Cambridge is stated in the following letter:—

"2 STOUGHTON HALL,
CAMBRIDGE, DEC. 10, 1889.

"PROF. J. B. AMES:—

"Dear Sir:—In the spring of 1889, when I was a special student in Harvard College, I obtained, by the assistance of a member of the football team, a place in a store in Cambridge, and also a small loan of money from a Harvard student. This loan has been in a great part paid from my own earnings. In no other way, direct or indirect, have I received any pecuniary assistance from any association or individual for taking part in athletics at Harvard College. Nor has any such assistance been offered to me.

"Yours truly,
H. O. STICKNEY."

"Prof. J. B. Ames,
Harvard Law School,
Cambridge, Mass."

The "evidence" finally refers to a private letter from Mr. Upton, explaining why he did not go to Princeton, and to Mr. Dean's trip to Europe last summer. We regret that a copy of Mr. Upton's letter was not sent us by Mr. Miller, as requested, and that a statement in regard to the Spalding team which Mr. Miller intended to enclose in his second letter was also omitted. But a sufficient explanation of the matter is found in two letters printed herewith, one from Mr. Dean and the other from Mr. Spalding. We certainly think it undesirable that gentlemen should engage in sports on such terms; but in view of the fact that this exhibition baseball team came also from Yale and Princeton, we see no ground for special condemnation of the Harvard players.

We have not contented ourselves with an investigation of the charges presented by the officers of the Princeton Association, but have carried our inquiries further. We can discover no trace of payment, or offer of money, to any person to play on Harvard teams this year. Employment has in a case or two been secured for men of moderate means by those interested in them. And there was in 1888-'89 the instance referred to above, in which an athletic man, not then a member of any team, borrowed a sum of money for college expenses from a fellow-student. There were, further, a few cases in which the full board of members of teams have been paid at training-tables during the period of training. This practice, however, has been stopped by the managers of the teams.

Rumor of irregularities in previous years have reached us, and while we have not been able to verify them, we cannot assert that Harvard has in the past been more free from this difficulty than her sister colleges. And even this year it is possible that vague and general promises of financial aid or advantage have been made by irresponsible persons; but the students and graduates, the officers of the athletic associations and this Committee, all decidedly condemn any such offers, by whomever made.

5. THE QUESTION OF A RETRACTION.

We beg leave again to correct an extraordinary misapprehension on the part of the officers of the Princeton Association, for which they alone must be held responsible. The Harvard Football Association has not "publicly based its withdrawal from the League upon the charge that Princeton defeated Harvard with a team partly composed of paid and irregular players." It has made no charges whatever against the Princeton management, whether general or special.

The true position of the Harvard Association in this matter should be understood. It has been seriously misstated, and our students have suffered, in consequence, undeserved criticism.

The withdrawal of Harvard from the Intercollegiate Football League was due to the fact that the intense competition within the League had led to objectionable practices in all the colleges, which, as was proved at the meeting held in New York on November 4 and 14, Princeton could not be brought to abandon by amicable agreement. The chief of these objectionable practices are: first, inducing good players to enter college, or to return to college mainly for the purpose of engaging in intercollegiate contests; and, secondly, putting on teams good players who are not in reality amateurs, but have received compensation for the practice of their sport. In many cases this has gone no further than the acceptance of board, traveling expenses, and perhaps a money allowance for incidentals. Present players on various college teams—in Princeton, Yale, and Harvard alike—have accepted such pecuniary advantages. But in other cases it has included the acceptance of money for playing particular games, the acceptance of a salary for teaching athletics, and the practice of athletics for a livelihood. According to the invariable practice of amateur organizations in England and America, any one of the three acts last named debars the person concerned, from further participation in amateur sports.

Experience seemed to show that Princeton—perhaps because of her smaller numbers—was more prone to these objectionable practices than Yale or Harvard. We leave it to you and to the public to judge, from the evidence in 1 and 2 above, whether or not she can justly be thought to have yielded to them this autumn in the constitution of her football team. She is certainly on record as having opposed the passage of the rules aimed at their suppression, which were proposed in the convention held on November 4. She alone voted against them, and the captain of her team is reported by the delegate of the Yale team to have said, as he left the convention, that their adoption would disqualify one half of the Princeton team.

These rules were passed by the combined efforts of Yale and Harvard, but proved ineffective. A Princeton player who was challenged under them as ineligible to play, took refuge in a technicality at the meeting held November 14, and refused to answer any questions, and Yale and Harvard were outvoted by Princeton and the smaller colleges. The Harvard Football Association then felt that only one course was open to it; namely, to withdraw from the present League and to frame rules which should suppress present objectionable practices and should govern the constitution of its own team hereafter. This course left open for future consideration the question of forming a new league.

We are of the opinion that the action of Harvard in withdrawing from the Intercollegiate Football League is justified. To put on teams players who are not bona fide students has a pernicious effect on the teams, on the colleges, and on the sport. College athletics have become infected with professionalism, and there is no prospect of improvement under the present League. The spirit of recent conventions has been that of casting formal difficulties in the way of a proper agreement between gentlemen. We are convinced that the League in its present form is an obstacle to genuine sport.

We are entirely in accord with the effort made by the students of this University, so to reform college sports that they shall hereafter be played under rules which shall limit participation in them to bona fide members of the University, who have never had any pecuniary profit from their sport; and we heartily approve the new rules (subjoined), which have lately been unanimously adopted by the Harvard Football and Baseball Association, and have been sent to us with the request that they receive our sanction. They provide that no one shall be allowed to represent Harvard University in any public athletic contest who is not a bona fide member of the University, taking a full year's work, and who is not in a strict sense an amateur. They will hereafter govern the constitution of all teams in this College, whatever may be the rules of other colleges.

These rules are the best evidence of the sincerity of our students in their efforts to reform. Within them no objection will be made by this Committee to any arrangements entered into by the students, provided these arrangements avoid interference on the part of the participants and students at large with that study which is the purpose and reason for which young men come to college.

In closing this communication we beg to assure you that we deprecate the public nature of this discussion.

We have the honor, Gentlemen, to be
Very respectfully yours,

DOCUMENTS

accompanying a letter sent by the Committee on the Regulation of Athletic Sports of Harvard University to the Faculty Committee on Outdoor Sports of Princeton College, Dec. 18, 1889:

I. LETTER OF MR. MILLER TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE REGULATION OF ATHLETIC SPORTS.

PRINCETON, NOV. 27, 1889.

To Chairman of the Committee on Athletics in the Faculty of Harvard University:

We respectfully submit herewith a statement of the Princeton football management in regard to the status of the football team representing Princeton College.

On such statement, the weight and authority of which will at once be evident to you, we respectfully request that a public retraction be made by the Harvard football management of the charges that have been made against our team.

Very respectfully,

F. S. MILLER,
President P. U. F. B. A.

We furnish also herewith a portion of certain evidence in our possession, affecting the Harvard team, which we hope may be also considered by you in the interest of college athletics.

2. EVIDENCE FURNISHED BY THE OFFICERS OF THE PRINCETON FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION.

EVIDENCE.

In support of our statement that the Harvard management have offered pecuniary assistance to players we submit the following evidence. First, a letter from a member of last year's eleven:

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., NOV. 25, 1889.

To President P. U. F. B. A.:

DEAR SIR:—Messrs. Sears and Cumnock, speaking to the Andover team last fall, offered any man who would come to Harvard and get on their team, their expenses through college. I myself was absent, but was told by the members of our team, one of whom is now playing on Harvard's team.

SMITH MOWRY.

Also a written statement of R. S. Ammerman, of the University of Pennsylvania, dated November 25, 1889, as follows:

"Inducements of the character mentioned, a scholarship and pecuniary compensation, a ticket to Boston, etc., were extended to me by a Harvard man early in November, to enter the Law School at Harvard and become a member of the Harvard Nine and Football Eleven."

Also an extract from a letter of L. D. Mowry, a former Andover player:

"Upton told me that Sears and Cumnock told him, and for that matter the whole Andover team, that it would not cost them a cent if they would go to Harvard and get on the team. Joe Dennison told me that Sears said that if he would try for the team and get on he would see that it did not cost him (J. D.) anything; if it cost Harvard five hundred dollars ($500) it would be all right. They would stand for the cost."

Also in a private letter of Mr. Upton's, explaining his not coming to Harvard, he says:

"This particular letter is not on hand at present writing, but can be obtained and forwarded."

Further, without stating the evidence concerning Mr. Dean's trip to Europe on the Spalding Baseball Team, which was probably as well known to you as it is to us, we recommend his case for your consideration.

In addition to this the following letter was received by Captain Ames last spring from Mr. Stickney, who played on the Harvard eleven this fall. We understand that the Yale management was similarly approached by this player:

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 11, 1889.

DEAR SIR:—I have been thinking of late of going to Princeton to college. I am tutoring now at Cambridge, with the idea of entering Harvard, and Cumnock thinks I am going to enter sure next year, but they don't seem to want to do much for me. Now I have to have help wherever I go. I saw Bruny Willard the other day, and he wanted me to write to you. He thinks P. is the place to go. I have played fast (foot?) ball at Exeter for two years. No doubt you have heard of me while I was there. I would like to see you and have a talk with you, and I take this way of doing it. I sold athletic goods while in Exeter, and thought it might pay me to take a line of tennis and baseball goods, etc., and come down there and see you, and perhaps make something. Now I would like to start Monday night and get there Tuesday morning, April 16. Now if you should inform me by telegraph (at my expense) where I could show up my goods at the best advantage, and have a little 'ad' in the college paper to this office (effect?) that I should be at such a place next Tuesday and Wednesday with a line of English tennis goods, baseball and athletic goods of all kinds, it would be a great help to me; let me hear from you as soon as you get this, and oblige.

Respectfully yours,

H. O. STICKNEY.

No. 8 Boylston Street, Cambridge, Mass.

P. S.—If you think it would be better for me to wait until Friday and Saturday, let me know.

STICKNEY.

3. LETTER OF MR. AMES IN REPLY TO MR. STICKNEY. (Printed above, section 4.)

4. LETTER OF MR. CUMNOCK.

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 7, 1889.

Professor J. W. White:

DEAR SIR:—I have examined the evidence submitted by Princeton. In answer, I say without reservation that I never made any such statements as are there ascribed to me, to members of the Andover team or to any person at any time. I have never made any offer of pecuniary aid to any person to become or to remain a member of the Harvard team, and such offers have not, to my knowledge, been made to any member of the Harvard Football Association. Moreover, Mr. Sears and I did not go to Andover "in the fall," but in March, and did not see the team, but only three members of it, one of whom announced that he was going to Yale to be with a brother; another that he was going to Harvard. We were in Andover less than two hours, and were together the whole time. The whole charge is false and without foundation from beginning to end.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR J. CUMNOCK.

5. LETTER OF MR. UPTON.

CAMBRIDGE, Dec. 7, 1889.

Professor J. W. White:

DEAR SIR:—I did not state to Mr. L. D. Mowry or to any other person that money offers of any kind had been made to me or to other members of the Andover team. No such offers have ever been made to me by Captain Sears, Captain Cumnock or any other person, either before entering college or since. Last summer, on the invitation of several Princeton men, I went to Cape May and played on a baseball team. There were seven Princeton men and one University of Pennsylvania man besides myself. We all received our board and an allowance for incidental expenses, but were not paid for our services. I have never received any money for engaging in athletics.

Respectfully yours,

J. D. UPTON.

6. LETTER OF MR. DENNISON.

50 College House.

MY DEAR PROFESSOR AMES:—I am in receipt of the extract of Mr. Lew Mowry's letter to the authorities of Princeton College, in which he says:

"Joe Dennison told me that Sears said that if he would try for the team and get on he would see that it did not cost him

(J. D.) anything; if it cost Harvard $500, it would be all right. They would stand for the cost."

The extract is false from beginning to end. I cannot even imagine the source of Mr. Mowry's authority. I never had any conversation with him in which I gave utterance to the foregoing quotation, and was never offered any inducement to play on the team either by Mr. Sears, captain of the eleven in '88, or anybody else. I shall write to Mr. Mowry and will advise you of the result of the correspondence.

With the greatest respect,

JOSEPH A. DENNISON.

Cambridge, Dec. 6, 1889.

7. LETTER OF MR. STICKNEY TO PROFESSOR AMES.

(Vide Section 4).

8. LETTER OF MR. AMMERMAN, PUBLISHED IN THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS ON NOV. 26, 1889.

To the Editor of the Press:

SIR:—A statement recently appeared in New York and Philadelphia papers in which it was alleged that certain inducements had been extended to me by a prominent baseball official to enter the Harvard Law School and play on the Harvard Baseball Nine and Football Eleven. Though the name of Linn of the Harvard Nine was not mentioned he has seen fit to deny that overtures were made by him. Under the existing circumstances, therefore, it seems desirable to state the existing basis of the statement in the papers. Inducements of the character mentioned—a scholarship and pecuniary compensation, a ticket to Boston, etc., were extended to me by a Harvard man early in November, to enter the Harvard Law School and become a member of the Harvard Baseball Nine and Football Eleven. The gentleman in question was not Captain Linn, nor am I able to give the official connection with the Harvard Association of the gentleman who approached me. However, the overtures were made and my reply at time was as has already been stated, and I take no interest in college athletics, and would not under any consideration engage in athletics for emoluments or under conditions other than those of personal enjoyment.

Very respectfully,

R. S. AMMERMAN.

9. LETTER OF MR. LINN.

CAMBRIDGE, NOV. 7, 1889.

Mr. William Hooper:

DEAR SIR:—In the New York Herald of the date of November 15 there was a despatch from Philadelphia to the effect that Mr. Ammerman, a student of the University of Pennsylvania, had been approached by a prominent member of the Harvard Nine and had been offered inducements to come to Harvard. In reply to your question concerning the article I wish to say that I have not made, and no one has been authorized by me, to make any offer whatsoever to Mr. Ammerman or to anybody else.

Yours very truly,

PHILLIP B. LINN,
Capt. H. U. B. C.

10. LETTER OF MR. DEAN.

CAMBRIDGE, DEC. 10, 1889.

Professor John W. White:

DEAR SIR:—Last summer I went with a nine to England. There were two other Harvard men, three Yale men, and one Princeton man. Our expenses were paid, including an allowance for incidentals. With this exception I have never received money or other emolument for engaging in athletics.

Yours, etc.,

D. S. DEAN.

II. LETTER OF MR. J. W. SPALDING.

NEW YORK, NOV. 13, 1889.

Mr. Dudley S. Dean, Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass.:

MY DEAR FRIEND DEAN:—I am in receipt of your letter of the 12th. I shall be only too happy to make a statement of the conditions under which you and the rest of the college boys went to England. I had an interview with Mr. A. G. Hodges last evening and gave him a letter to the effect that you went purely for pleasure, and that no money, except for your absolute expenses, was allowed. I can go still further and say that no money was paid to any of the gentlemen except upon the presentation of vouchers covering the amount of the preceding week's expenses, all of which vouchers I have in my desk and can produce if necessary. The amount we limited you to per week for board and lodging cannot in any way be regarded as payment for your services, as in limiting you to a certain amount it was not intended that it should be looked upon as an allowance for your services, but we merely wanted to have a limit on the amount of the expenses of the players so that they would not lead us into extravagant expenses. For them to consider that you and your friends who went to England at the expense of our firm are professionals is just about the same as to consider that every College Club player who travels at the expense of his club is a professional, and that every rowing man whose expenses for training are paid by his college is a professional also.

I shall certainly regret if this trip causes you and your friends any trouble, but you can rest assured that I shall put myself to any amount of trouble, and go before any Examining Board that requests it, and testify to the facts in this matter. I shall be very glad to see you if you come to New York.

With kind regards, I remain,

Very truly yours,
J. W. SPALDING.

12. RULES ADOPTED BY THE HARVARD FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION AND BASEBALL ASSOCIATION, AND ADOPTED AS STANDING REGULATIONS, APPLICABLE TO ALL SPORTS, BY THE COMMITTEE ON THE REGULATION OF ATHLETIC SPORTS, DEC. 17, 1889.

RULE 1. No one shall be allowed to represent Harvard University in any public athletic contest, either individually or as a member of any team, unless he can satisfy the Committee on the Regulation of Athletic Sports, that he is, and intends to be throughout the college year, a bona fide member of the University taking a full year's work.

RULE 2. No one shall be allowed to represent Harvard University in any public athletic contest, either individually or as a member of any team, who either before or since entering the University shall have engaged for money in any athletic competition, whether for a stake or for a money prize, or a share of the entrance fees or admission money; or who shall have taught or engaged in any athletic exercise or sport as a means of livelihood; or who shall have at any time received for taking part in any athletic sport or contest any pecuniary gain or emolument whatever, direct or indirect, with the single exception that he may have received from the College organization or from any permanent amateur association of which he was at the time a member, the amount by which the expenses necessarily incurred by him in representing his organization in athletic contests exceeded his ordinary expenses.

Rule 2 shall go into effect on January 1, 1890, but shall not be retroactive in the sense of disqualifying by reason of past acts men who would be eligible under the practice at that time existing.

In exceptional cases the Committee on the Regulation of Athletic Sports may by special vote remove the disqualification incurred under Rule 2 by acts performed before entrance to college.

In case other colleges should join with Harvard in adopting these rules, such disqualification shall not be removed without the consent of a majority of the said colleges.

THE ANSWER MADE BY PRINCETON.

PRINCETON, Feb. 24, 1890.

To the Committee on the Regulation of Athletic Sports of Harvard University:

GENTLEMEN:

Your statement of December 18 was handed to the Advisory Committee and Football Managers by the Faculty Committee on Outdoor Sports with the request that we make a careful investigation of the facts therein brought forward. We regret that our reply has been delayed by the Christmas recess and other circumstances.

We had anticipated, in an investigation coming from a committee composed as yours is, a thoroughly fair view of the charges which have recently passed between Harvard and Princeton, and were surprised to find that it has a decidedly ex parte character. This is shown: first, by your selection of the alleged irregularities of the Princeton Management (p. 18) of this year, as the only instances which occur to you of practices requiring reform; second, by your failure to appreciate the position which Princeton took in the conventions of Nov. 4 and 14; third, by the manner in which you pass over the irregularities in the recent athletic management of Harvard (p. 17), followed by the unsupported statement made upon p. 18 in regard to the general conduct of athletics at Princeton.

While we have carefully inquired into the facts of the Princeton football management, in order to make a detailed reply to your criticisms and inquiries, we have made no further investigation of the Harvard players.

I. THE PRINCETON STATEMENT.

1. The first part of the Princeton statement of November 27 was published in response to the urgent requests coming from alumni of the College in all parts of the country, that the Princeton Football Management should remove the very damaging impression given the public by the unfounded Harvard charges.

You make the following exception:

"We beg leave again to correct an extraordinary misapprehension on the part of the officers of the Princeton Association for which they alone must be held responsible. The Harvard Football Association has not 'publicly based its withdrawal from the League upon the charge that Princeton defeated Harvard with a team composed partly of paid and partly of irregular players. It has made no charges whatever against the Princeton players whether 'general' or 'special.'" (p. 17)

The above passage was written after full explanation of the grounds of Harvard's position had appeared in the Crimson, the official undergraduate organ of the College. Among several passages we quote the following: "And had it met an undergraduate amateur team like itself, would very likely have won." (November 19.) A similar passage is quoted on a later page.

Commenting on Harvard's withdrawal, the Hartford Courant, of November 22d said:

"The Harvard students, Wednesday night, at one of the most largely attended meetings in the history of the University, decided to withdraw from the Intercollegiate Football Association. They wish to form a dual league with Yale and also to express their disapproval of the professional methods which Princeton of late is alleged to have followed."

The Boston Transcript commented as follows:

"The question of withdrawal from the present three-cornered arrangement, in which Princeton, which is hardly an athletic college at all, having no crew nor any standing in the sports except what she has gained in football by dint of professionalism, manages to communicate a certain taint to the whole field of college sports, has really been under consideration for some time."

The New York Times of November 27:

"It was to be expected that Princeton should resent the charge of Harvard that her rush-line was manned by professionals."

This is finally confirmed upon pages 17 and 18 of your own statement of December 18:

"The withdrawal of Harvard from the Intercollegiate League was due to the fact that the intense competition with that League had led to objectional practices in all the colleges which . . . Princeton could not be brought to abandon by amicable agreement . . . first, inducing good players to enter college or to return to college mainly for the purpose of engaging in intercollegiate contests; and secondly, putting on teams good players who are not in reality amateurs, but have received compensation for the practice of their sport."

These cover, you observe, both of the expressions "irregular" and "paid," which we have quoted. It seems an evasion to say that the Harvard Football Association publicly withdrew upon any other grounds than the supposed professionalism of Princeton, and it is only reasonable to hold the football management responsible for allegations appearing in the College press and the newspaper correspondence of the College.

2. We have quoted these passages partly to show that the latter part of the Princeton statement (relating to pecuniary inducements having been offered to Harvard players) was published under the provocation of charges which we believe are unprecedented in the history of intercollegiate athletics. This was written, nevertheless, with the firm conviction that it was true, with the purpose of calling the attention of your committee to the facts of which we believed them ignorant, and to show that Harvard was in no position to prefer such charges against the Princeton team.

The first public allegation of this sort came from Yale, to which the Harvard correspondent of the New York Evening Post replied as follows:

"CAMBRIDGE, November 1.

"There has been no greater admission of weakness on the part of an athletic team this year than that which Yale has brought upon herself in her allegations concerning the present football eleven of Harvard. The charges are to the effect that Harvard has been hiring men to enter that University for athletic purposes; and that many of her present football team are so hired. Exactly what the hiring has consisted in has not been stated, nor have the charges against Harvard been made direct. The managers of the Harvard teams and the members of her athletic committee have been greatly surprised to learn that Yale, above all other colleges, had made such charges, and are at a loss for a cause to which to attribute it."

Similar reports were widely current among college men. The explicit denials of the Harvard players and your own very thorough investigation—

"We can discover no trace of payment, or offer, of money to any person to play upon the Harvard teams this year," —certainly relieves the Harvard football management of all suspicion of a charge which the Princeton managers had least in mind; that is, of direct money offers. What they did have in mind, and what is freely admitted in your statement (pp. 8, 16), is that direct inducements were offered to several players.

We call attention to the course of Captain Cumnock, who, at the beginning of the season, strengthened his team by securing the return of Mr. Cranston, who, as reported in the College papers, had married and left Harvard for good; of Mr. Stickney, who had already offered his services to Yale and to Princeton; of Mr. Upton, who had only a few weeks before made his arrangements for entering Princeton.

We do not see anything dishonorable in the arrangements which led these members of the Harvard team to take courses in Harvard, except in the light of the standard you have proposed. The bare question is, Would either of these students have entered or returned to Cambridge, if it had not been for these offers of indirect assistance? Were these arrangements made to help men of limited means to get an education, or to strengthen the Harvard team of 1889? We have heard from several sources how these arrangements were regarded by the friends of these two players, and you can judge from Mr. Mowry's letter how readily they could be misunderstood in a large preparatory school.

We therefore consider that if these players referred to above went to Cambridge by means of assistance procured for them either indirectly or in business propositions by the football management, such assistance was in the nature of "pecuniary inducement."* If, however, our information is incorrect and they found these positions themselves, and if Mr. Upton was incorrect in his statement to Princeton men that his scholarship had been in the first instance promised him by the football managers, then the Princeton charge is certainly unjustifiable in every sense, and we will take pleasure in publicly withdrawing it upon hearing from you.

The experience of this year shows that the practice of holding out indirect inducement to players should be given up. If Princeton adopted it in one case this year it was because Harvard had in the previous year diverted at least one player from Princeton. While in one sense harmless, in another it encourages in the minds of schoolboys the idea that proficiency in the sports leads to a reduction of college expenses, and this is contrary to a purely amateur spirit or the practice of a sport purely for sport's sake.

2. THE STATUS OF THE PRINCETON PLAYERS.

As Professor Sloane has already written you, the theory of athletic government at Princeton differs from that at Cambridge. In general the Faculty never interferes except in so far as to see that the contests do not conflict with the college exercises; that the members of the teams are qualified to play as students of the College and do not injure the name of the College abroad by breaches of good conduct. With these exceptions the Faculty Committee leaves the entire management of athletics to the students. There is no doubt that if, for example, Mr. Wagenhurst's case had been referred to this committee, he would not have been allowed to play; but in this theory of government what might have been gained in a single case like this would be lost in taking from the students the power of initiative in the development of independence of character and action. Even under the above limited interpretation of his duties, the cases of two men were carefully considered by the Chairman of the Committee on Outdoor Sports, it having come to his notice that there was a report that these men were not regularly connecting themselves with the College. Both men were carefully examined, and only after their positive, unqualified statement of their intention to remain in college at least through the year was permission given them to play.

In general, although Princeton, for the reasons and in the manner more fully described below, opposed the changes in the constitution of November 4, she nevertheless acted fairly upon the new rules and took immediate steps to comply with both the spirit and the letter. Mr. Wagenhurst was accordingly at once withdrawn from the team, although a full explanation of the facts which led to his connection with it would have placed this connection in a somewhat different light.

In regard to Mr. George, he did not return to Princeton simply to play football, but in order to enter a course for a higher degree, fitting him for the profession of teacher, which had been part of his previous plan, announced the year before. No secret has been made of his proposed connection with the team. It was announced in the New York Times early in October. He came late, partly for private reasons, partly because his duties as supervisor of sports kept him during the noon hour at Lawrenceville. We cannot agree with your committee that the general supervision which Mr. George is expected to give to the outdoor sports at Lawrenceville, outside of his regular duties as instructor in English

*Extract from Annual Report of Board of Managers of the Amateur Athletic Union, Sept. 14, 1880:

"The preservation of the purity of sport is the chiefest of our responsibilities. It should be the care and especial pride of every club, whether large or small, to be jealous of the reputation of its members, and be in such a position that, should accusations be made, they could immediately demonstrate the incorrectness thereof.

There can be but one of two positions for an athlete to occupy, either amateur or professional. It is not necessary to give him a salary to bring him under the ban. The guarantee of compensating occupations, peculiar or special financial favors from clubs, or prominent officers or members thereof, the total absence of financial obligation to a club, the use of a poolroom for an athlete's pecuniary remuneration, are methods that are illegitimate, dishonest, and should find no place with us."

and other branches, in any sense constitutes him a professional athlete. You do not intend it so, but the application of this term to a man of his character and position puts him in a very unpleasant light.

In regard to Mr. Cash, he told the members of the Princeton team last year of his desire to enter here in the autumn and try for the eleven. No inducement of any shape or form was made to him to enter, except his chance for playing on the eleven. It seems to us a novel position for you to take that it is a very serious matter (page 18) for a man to enter college to play football. This has been going on in the American and English colleges since the time athletic sports were first introduced. We all know athletic supremacy is more highly esteemed by many young men than intellectual culture, and it seems to us that the duty of the College authorities in the case of such men is to see that they maintain their standing in their studies, and that the College has no right to inquire further into their motives. We therefore state that, so far as Mr. Cash's relation to the College was concerned, he selected a genuine and by no means easy course of study, and his admission was precisely upon the same terms as those applied to other special students.

In regard to Mr. Ames we make a fuller statement below. You consider it a suspicious circumstance that he did not readily appear before the convention to answer to the charges that were made against him. The fact is, he had already denied the specific charges in a sworn affidavit, and as this denial was not accepted he had reason to believe that it would be necessary for him to produce counter-evidence in order to support his own affidavit. This counter-evidence had not been received on November 14; it was received a few days later. We think that Princeton was justified in taking full advantage of a literal interpretation of the new constitution in order to protect Mr. Ames from the charge which he was not at the time in a position to rebut on any other evidence except his own word. It seems to us that after all the resentments of the present season have passed away, Harvard will regret having taken the course she did in the attempt to weaken Princeton's Eleven by disqualifying Mr. Ames.

3. PECUNIARY ASSISTANCE TO PLAYERS.

In the early part of last year the Advisory Committee took the ground that absolutely no pecuniary inducements should be offered men to enter Princeton to play football. This was made with the hearty concurrence of the football management. Without exercising any further supervision of the football accounts, it was most gratifying to the Advisory Committee, at the time of the investigation preceding the Princeton statement of November 27, to learn that not a single member of the eleven had been benefited directly or indirectly in a financial way, with the exception of three men who were receiving free board at the training-table. You find (page 7), that this does not appear to be the invariable attitude for Princeton in this regard, in support of which you quote Mr. Ames's letter to Mr. Stickney. This letter can be readily explained as follows: When the Princeton men returned from Andover and reported that Mr. Upton had been promised a scholarship at Harvard, they inquired whether it was possible for him to secure free tuition at Princeton, and were told by a member of the Faculty that if he presented evidence of good character and scholarship he could take advantage of the rule which is frequently extended to students of very limited means, by which their tuition is remitted. Another arrangement was that Mr. Upton could secure the management of an eating-club and thus obtain his board free. This is a very general practice among students of limited means at Princeton.

Mr. Ames was not authorized to make any arrangement for Mr. Stickney, and wrote to him without consulting either of the Princeton managers. It is not at all likely that Mr. Stickney could have procured free tuition. Still, if you will read Mr. Ames's letter to Mr. Stickney in the light of correspondence with Mr. Upton, you will see that the inducement was of an entirely indirect character. In the sentence "The athletic men at Princeton get by all odds the best treatment in any of the colleges," he refers simply to the fact that, as a democratic spirit prevails at Princeton, athletic students can win a certain social position which they could not at some other colleges. Nothing else is implied in this passage.

It is, moreover, fair ground to take that the College is only indirectly responsible for letters which are written absolutely without the knowledge or consent of the football managers.

We refer you to our own experience in Ammerman's case in illustration of the impossibility of proving or disproving private assistance or inducement offered to players.

4. THE HARVARD REFORM MOVEMENT AS IT APPEARED TO PRINCETON.

To make this clear, we may look back into the past athletic relations of the two colleges. In the autumn of 1886, Princeton and Harvard were still on the extremely friendly terms which had existed since 1876, the year of the first football match. It is not an exaggeration to say that the intercollegiate relations during this period were of an ideal character. The visiting teams were always hospitably entertained, and during the games the same friendly and courteous feelings prevailed. In the spring of 1887 the unfriendly feeling which has culminated in the recent controversy began with the conduct, upon the Princeton field, of certain members of the Harvard nine which represented the College in that year. The breach had been widening ever since by a series of retaliations in which Princeton has undoubtedly been much to blame, of which we may give two examples. Last year the Harvard Football Treasurer justly protested that the receipts of the Harvard-Princeton game at Princeton had been withheld until late in the winter. This was simply a repetition of a similar delay which had occurred on the side of Harvard the year before. It no doubt raised suspicion this autumn, when Princeton declined to send the names of the football team in advance to Cambridge. Is it known to your committee that last year the names of the Harvard team were kept back from Princeton until 11:30 A. M., the game being played at 3? It was then found that the Harvard team had been strengthened only a few days previous.

In this recent state of feelings nothing good had been credited to either college by its rival. From the outset Princeton put no faith in the disinterestedness of the Harvard reform movement. The suspicion with which this movement was at first regarded was confirmed later by the attempt to disqualify Ames, since it was clear that the elaborate case against him must have been prepared before November 4 and had furnished one of the underlying motives of the "reform." We have therefore taken pains to procure and present to you below the full proceedings of both conventions, which we think fully support this suspicion and show how just is your statement on page 18.

In the words of Captain Poe (N. Y. Times, Nov. 15) the reform measures were quickly and unceremoniously thrust through, and were opposed by Princeton on the ground of their special retroactive character. Last year Princeton put a very strong team in the field; it is reported that late in the season the veteran full-back of Yale, Bull, left his office in New York, remained for a few weeks in New Haven, won the championship for Yale by superior kicking, and returned to his office. Would Harvard have supported Princeton in calling a convention and adopting a retroactive change in the constitution which, ten days before Thanksgiving, would have deprived Yale of her full-back? If Harvard should put a strong nine in the field next spring, and Princeton should busy herself during the winter seeking evidence that one or more of the Harvard players have received money for playing baseball, would Harvard welcome this evidence, accept the situation cheerfully, and assist in disqualifying these gentlemen? If Harvard should protest against such constitutional action, would Princeton be justified in holding Harvard up to the public as an opponent to reform? It is clear that opinion in these cases is formed by college bias; the securing of Messrs. Upton, Stickney, and Cranston was regarded with the same suspicion at Princeton as the return of Mr. George or the entrance of Mr. Cash was regarded at Harvard. Your committee regard lightly the return of Mr. Cranston, and very seriously the return of Mr. George. You also draw a distinction between the case of Mr. Dean, who had his expenses paid for playing baseball (more than the actual expenses necessary, according to the statement of Mr King) and that of Mr. Ames, whom you supposed to have had part of his summer expenses paid. How could Princeton regard Harvard's action as sincere while she kept one "professional" on her team? For it was reported to us through two persons, a Yale graduate and an undergraduate, that Captain Cumnock (or Mr. Leeds) stated to Captain Gill, just before the Harvard-Yale game at Springfield, that a member of his team had played baseball for money, but, desiring to be perfectly fair with Yale, he would withdraw him if Captain Gill wished. This report is confirmed by statements made to Princeton men by the player in question and indirectly by one of the rules which you have recently adopted:

"In exceptional cases the committee on the regulation of athletic sports may by special vote remove the disqualification incurred under Rule 2 by acts performed before entering college." (p. 33).

Again, your legislation and criticisms were directed solely against Princeton; you ignored the fact that last year and this year the Yale team was partly composed of players against whom decided objections could be raised if the standards were such as you were proposing. Finally, so many apparent irregularities have been observed at Harvard since the spring of 1887 that the impression prevailed at Princeton that the graduate and faculty supervision of the teams had become of a merely nominal character. This, however, is a matter of the past, and we only wish to recall it here in order to give you a clear conception of the grounds for mistrust from the Princeton point of view.

6. PRINCETON IN THE REFORM LEGISLATION.

In the new rules adopted by the Harvard Association (pages 32, 33), which have received your full sanction, we find the following:

"Rule 2 shall go into effect January 1, 1890, but shall not be retroactive in the sense of disqualifying, by reason of past acts, men who would be eligible under the practice at that time existing. In exceptional cases the Committee on the Regulation of Athletic Sports may by special vote remove the disqualification incurred under Rule 2 (relating to the receipt of money) by acts performed before entrance to college."

We call attention to these in their bearing upon your criticisms of Princeton's course in the reform legislation. They embody two ideas, first, the disapproval of retroactive legislation, second, the power of your committee in special cases to reinstate as an amateur a player who according to your definition is a professional.

In two sentences, one on page 17, you say:

"The withdrawal of Harvard from the Intercollegiate Football League was due to the fact that intense competition with the League had led to objectionable practices in all the colleges, which, as was proved in the meetings held in New York of November 4 and 14, Princeton could not be brought to abandon by amicable agreement."

"She (Princeton) is certainly on record for having opposed the passage of rules aimed at their suppression, which were proposed in the convention held on November 4."

You take the ground that Princeton has been in the position of an persistent opponent to reform. We infer from this that you do not fully appreciate the impression which was conveyed to Princeton by Harvard's course in the reform movement which we have already explained above. Second, that you have not been informed as to the stand Princeton has recently taken in regard to the playing of graduates. Third, that you have also been kept in ignorance of what actually transpired at the two conventions. We have already tried to make clear the first point, i. e., the Princeton view of the Harvard movement. On the second point, the playing of graduates by Yale and Harvard had always placed Princeton at a great disadvantage with her lack of graduate professional schools, and she has on one or more occasions introduced in the conventions the subject of limiting contests to undergraduates, but without success.

We would enter more fully into the third point. You describe the reform legislation as having been "passed by the combined efforts of Yale and Harvard." This is a half-accurate description of the case. Princeton was not in opposition to general reform legislation, but, when the purpose of Harvard and Yale fully unfolded itself, was opposed, and we think on reasonable grounds, to special and retroactive legislation which was passed in the graduate and undergraduate branches of the convention.

Before the first convention of November 4 Princeton anticipated that special reform rules would be brought forward, and, being unwilling even to appear to oppose anything in the nature of a reform, a number of reform regulations, which she was willing to adopt at once, were prepared at a meeting of the Advisory Committee, and presented to the convention; but as it appeared that these regulations would affect all teams and not the Princeton team only, Harvard and Yale declined to consider them. The point of order was raised that the meeting was called to consider only professionalism, but this point was waived later. We send the following authentic account of the convention of November 4, which was noted down by Mr. Edwards a few days after the meeting:

"Mr. Camp (Yale) proposes the rules forbidding any professional athlete or any one who had received any pecuniary inducement to play college football.

"Pennsylvania and Princeton both voted against the first clause of the resolution on the ground that it was in the nature of ex post facto legislation, introduced in an unconstitutional manner (the constitution proposing an exact method for changes in the rules, and proposed simply to cripple Princeton's team.

"The Harvard representative, Mr. Leeds, stated, as his understanding of the rule, that if a man had ever played billiards for money (i. e. professionally), he could not play college football.

"When Princeton saw the purpose of Yale and Harvard, she stated through Mr. Edwards her ideas of the reforms necessary in college football and read the following series of resolutions:

"Proposed amendments to Article IX of the Constitution:

"Princeton proposes to amend and revise Article IX of the Constitution, so that henceforth it may read as follows:

ARTICLE IX.

"SEC. 1. No man shall be allowed to play more than four years on a team representing any of the colleges in this association, or on the team of more than one college.

"SEC. 2. No man shall be allowed to play on a team representing any of the colleges in this association unless he be an undergraduate student of the said college.*

"SEC. 3. No student in the Departments of Law, Medicine, or Theology of any of the colleges in this association, who has, previous to his membership therein, played upon a team representing any other college in this association, shall be allowed to play on the team of the said college in which he is a student.†

"SEC. 4. No man shall be allowed to play in a team representing any of the colleges in this association if he in any way, directly or indirectly, receive any pay for so doing. Any inducement of pecuniary value shall be held as included in the meaning of the word 'pay,' as used in this section.

"SEC. 5. All questions of eligibility arising under this section must be investigated and decided by the Advisory Committee on application of any college.

* This would have excluded Messrs. George, Cowan, and Wagenhurst from the Princeton eleven, and four men each from the Yale and Harvard elevens.

† This would have excluded Mr. Cash from the Princeton eleven, and Mr. Saxe from the Harvard eleven. These resolutions would therefore have affected all teams alike, and would have taken four very strong players from Princeton.

"Harvard was unwilling to consider these reforms, insisting that the meeting was held to consider professionalism.

"Pennsylvania then proposed the five-hours-a-week rule. Yale and Harvard again objected, stating that the meeting was called only to consider professionalism. But it was not until Princeton urged that all the colleges waive their rights of notices of a new meeting that this resolution was passed.

"Then Princeton proceeded to propose that the rule be considered preventing a student of one college playing on the team of another college.

"Harvard refused absolutely to waive her notice so as to consider this, and then Princeton, clearly seeing that the action of the convention was not for reform, but simply to cripple Princeton's team, saw no use in introducing the other reforms she was ready to pass, and made no further motion."

Captain Poe did not state, as has been reported to you, that the passage of the resolutions would disqualify half the Princeton team.

The Princeton delegate went to the second convention prepared to discuss the case of Ames in a friendly manner. He had not been previously consulted as to the time of meeting, which had been placed at nine o'clock, and had a law case on the court calendar at ten. He asked as a favor that the convention be postponed until eleven o'clock, when he could be present. This request Messrs. Leeds and Richards positively refused to comply with, and it was only by the neutral votes of Messrs. Beattys and Bell that Mr. Edwards was able to be present at this convention.

Surely this cannot be characterized as part of an "amicable agreement." When, after this introduction, at eleven o'clock, Mr. Leeds appeared with his formidable sworn documents, the whole animus of Harvard's previous course was perfectly clear, and Mr. Edwards felt justified in taking advantage of the letter of the constitution to prevent the discussion of the case of Mr. Ames. We cannot agree with you and regard it as "technicality" that Mr. Ames had not been allowed sufficient time to procure his counter-evidence, and that Princeton refused to waive all her rights under the constitution, which had been adopted only ten days before by the very colleges which now proposed to set it aside, when it was so apparent Messrs. Leeds and Richards were ready to vote to disqualify Ames, evidence or no evidence.

We have also a full account of the proceedings of this meeting, from which we make the following brief extract:

"Princeton moved to table the protest on the ground that Ames received his notice to appear an hour after he had sent his affidavit. Mr. Leeds admitted that Harvard had not seen Ames's affidavit before sending its protest. In short, Princeton took the ground that Mr. Ames did not fear the examination, but would not consent to have his time to prepare his defense cut short by a hostile college.

"Mr. Leeds was, however, allowed to retire and show Mr. Beattys all the Harvard evidence, and after this, as you know, Mr. Beattys voted with Messrs. Bell and Edwards to table the protests. The meeting closed by Mr. Edwards's immediate withdrawal of the Princeton protest against the Harvard players."

There is no ground for considering Mr. Beattys as a prejudiced party, since he represents a college which has invariably hitherto supported Yale. The reasons for his vote we quote below from his letter to the New York Sun:

To say the very least, it would have been courteous in Harvard to have waited until she had received word that the affidavit had at least arrived, but therein came the rub. She knew that one more day would be fatal, because a player cannot be examined within forty-eight hours of a championship game, and all she cared for was to disqualify Ames before her games with Princeton two days distant. When all these facts were known and sifted, Wesleyan refused to vote with Harvard to cripple Princeton's team within forty-eight hours of their championship game, when by so doing it would have been in direct opposition to the constitution."

5. PRINCETON'S PAST RECORD.

We find upon page 18 the following passage:

"Experience seemed to show that Princeton, perhaps on account of her smaller numbers, was more prone to these objectionable practices than Yale or Harvard."

This result of your investigation, we believe, originated in the Crimson of November 27:

"It is impossible, however, despite our recent defeat at her hands, that Princeton should put into the field a fair team capable of competing with Harvard. It is merely a question of resources, nothing more."

It re-appears in an interview with a Faculty member of your committee, published in the New York Times of January 19:

"And, as Princeton cannot compete with Harvard, if both Universities organize their teams on the same basis, it is that she would, if possible, use her high-pressure methods in the future as in the past."

These statements leave us no room for further doubt as to the spirit in which you have reviewed this controversy. We have taken some pains to inquire as to what foundation there may be for them.

1. Graduate Players.—Princeton has been competing with Harvard and Yale since 1877. Of thirteen elevens seven have been made up wholly of undergraduates. In the six remaining teams we find altogether eight graduate players, as follows: McNair, '79; Devereux, '80; Moffat, '84; R. and H. Hodge, '86; Cowan and Irvine, '88; George, 89. Counting men double who played more than one year (Hodge, Cowan), we find eleven graduates. Not a single one of the first seven graduates was in any sense whatever drawn to Princeton by football. They were all engaged in regular graduate work. As we have already fully explained, Mr. George entered a course in 1889 which he had purposed entering in 1890.

In the same period, according to figures kindly furnished us by the Chairman of your Committee, Harvard has put in the field twelve elevens, containing twenty graduate players, and has played two years only with teams composed wholly of undergraduates. We have no record of the motives which led these graduates to return to Harvard, except in the case of Mr. Woodman. We have not been able as yet to procure a similar record from the Yale Committee, but the number of graduates on Yale teams has been very large.

This year the table of graduate players stood: Harvard—4, Yale—4, Princeton—2. Yet your statements have given the public just the opposite impression. There is thus no foundation for your statement so far as graduates are concerned.

2. Undergraduate Players.—There is in the same period one instance of an undergraduate, who had left college, returning in order to play football and leaving at Christmas. We refer to Cook, '89. The circumstances in his case were peculiar. He had left college after being forced to resign the captaincy of the eleven by the criticism of an upper class. It was natural for him to desire to return to college after the graduation of that class and resume his old place on the team. He was regularly entered and took all his studies during the time he was in Princeton. We are not defending this action; it is a solitary instance previous to 1889 of anything of this kind, and it is an interesting coincidence that Mr. Cook faced Mr. Woodman, whose connection with Harvard College was, as we have been informed, of a most transient character.

The graduate baseball players are still fewer in number. In thirteen years we find two cases of slight irregularity in which resident Princeton graduates took nominal graduate courses in order to play upon the nine; each occurred a number of years ago.

We believe this is an accurate statement of the past personnel of the Princeton teams. We are therefore surprised that, after careful investigation of the Harvard teams, and with full knowledge, among other matters, of the spurious law-student who for two years filled an important position on the Harvard nine, you should send abroad over the country a charge which amounts to this: That it is not the skill or pluck of Princeton which has enabled her to compete with Harvard, but her irregular methods which have made up for her disparity in numbers.

The course of Princeton in the sports needs no warmer defence than it has received in public letters from several generous-spirited graduates of Harvard.

So far, therefore, from being the most prone, we believe that Princeton has been the least prone to irregular practices in former years. Harvard initiated the practice of importing players, and Yale of bringing back, or retaining, graduate experts on her teams. We believe that if all the circumstances were known attending each player of 1889, the three elevens would be found substantially similar and illustrating alike the necessity of a thorough revision of the rules which, as shown in the first convention, no college is more ready to join than Princeton.

6. THE QUESTION OF REFORM IN COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

Princeton, as seen above, proposed in the convention of November 4 a number of reforms which are substantially similar to those proposed by Harvard six weeks later. You enumerate some additional articles in which (with the exception or the addition to Rule 2 quoted on page 8 of this statement) we heartily concur.

We would also suggest the following:

FIRST: That no electioneering for athletics be permitted in the schools. The passage of this rule will affect all the colleges alike, and will put a stop to a practice which threatens to become a serious evil.

SECOND: In order to prevent any misapprehension as to the personnel of the teams, let the names of the teams and substitutes be published, say a month in advance, as is now done by Oxford and Cambridge, in order to avoid the very disputes which have arisen with us.

THIRD: For the sake of intercollegiate courtesy, let us eliminate all sworn affidavits and accept the simple written statement of the Captain of the team as sufficient in all cases of doubt as to the eligibility of the players.

In the same cause let us, in times of controversy, treat each other fairly and courteously in the public press, or keep our disputes and opinions entirely out of the newspapers. We are happy to say that in all the heat of the recent controversy not one word was admitted to the Princetonian against our old friend and rival, Harvard, which we would now wish to recall. Nothing is more fruitful of bad feeling or of bad temper in contests upon the field than the wanton circulation of charges and countercharges in the college and public press. We regret now that one departure from this course was made in the Princeton statement, even under the exceptional circumstances which occasioned it.

We have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

In case the Athletic Committee of the University Club neglects or refuses to so appoint, the representatives of the baseball association of each University shall choose two (2) graduates of their respective Universities to constitute the said committee on eligibility of players, who shall choose a fifth member by mutual consent. Said fifth member shall be a member of said University Athletic Club.

APPENDIX C.

At the request of many Princetonians, the following pictures and brief sketches of the lives of a few brilliant Princeton athletes are printed. No attempt has been made to obtain a complete necrology. No doubt many others deserve special mention; but the general consensus of opinion chose these men, not only for their athletic achievements, but for the influence of their lives upon Princeton's athletic history. The accounts have been prepared by classmates.

W. EARL DODGE, '79.

Earl Dodge was a born athlete. His tall, lithe, graceful figure lent itself easily to all kinds of athletic sports. Such a generous, breezy soul could not be confined within the four walls of a room. He lived in the open. The exuberance of his animal spirits and the intensity of his buoyant nature—he did nothing by halves—drove him into every kind of outdoor exercise. He began to play ball within twenty-four hours after entering college. He was among the first of the undergraduates to introduce lawn tennis at Princeton. The first lawn-tennis court was laid out by his hand on the open space between the gymnasium and the old observatory. He rode a bicycle in the days when the number of "wheels" in College could be counted on the fingers of one hand. To enumerate the various athletic interests with which he was identified, either as player, director, or promoter, would be to give a catalogue of all such organizations in the college during the period from 1875 to 1879. His chief contribution, however, to the cause of athletics at Princeton was not the liberal gifts of money nor the rare skill and prowess displayed on many a well-fought field, but the new spirit he enthused into every branch of college sport.

Earl Dodge was first, last, and all the time a gentleman. He was as conscientious in play as in study, as courteous in a football game as he was dignified in leading a prayer meeting. He was no weakling. He played for all he was worth. "Dodge had his shirt torn into ribbons" is the record of one of the Harvard-Princeton football games. He played ball, but he always played fair, and set an example both on the field and in the no less trying position in the committee-room, which won the respect and confidence of friend and opponent alike.

It was largely due to his tact, forbearance, gracious manner, and yielding spirit that the first conference of the representatives of Yale, Harvard, Columbia, and Princeton, held at Springfield, Mass., November 23, 1876, for the purpose of forming a football association under modified Rugby rules, came to an amicable agreement, and a new football era in the college world was inaugurated. He was a leader among men, throwing himself with such ardor into all sports that he inspired the same zeal in others. In the old days it was the custom for the football team to have a short practice after evening chapel. The then open space between Reunion and the gymnasium was the scene of many a contest. One can never forget the way Earl Dodge spurred on the team to do better work in these few moments of practice. He was in every play, all over the field, with a word of encouragement here and a word of censure there, and if there came a sudden "slump" in the game, his clear, musical voice rang out above all other sounds—"Line up, fellows, line up; you are not playing at all."

Earl Dodge was a clean man in word and act. His comrades soon learned this. Princeton men have not always been over-careful in this respect. Every loyal son of Princeton looks back through twenty years of athletic contests and has a reasonable pride in the general spirit of fair play and manliness that has characterized her representatives. Earl Dodge and the coterie of men he gathered about him did everything to give the right trend to athletics during that formative period of Princeton's history.

The success of Earl Dodge as an athlete was due to the same causes as his success as a man. "Everybody believed in him. He stood the test of ball-field, class-room, campus, and Christian conference."

The Princeton athlete of the twentieth century will do well if he possesses the energy, skill, and spirit of W. Earl Dodge.

HENRY CUMMINGS LAMAR, '80.

With Arthur Poe's great run in 1808, and Poe's great kick in 1809, fresh in the hearts of every Princeton man, comes the recollection of that other famous and ever memorable achievement by which "Tilly" Lamar snatched victory over Yale out of the very jaws of defeat, and gave to Princeton a championship in 1885. That was a victory such as only a player of the finest resource and the stoutest courage could win, and not one Princeton man who saw that game had the slightest doubt that if the opportunity came, if the moment for the supreme test was at hand, "Tilly" Lamar would prove equal to the demand, and would justify the abundant and enthusiastic confidence which every undergraduate of those days had in his marvellous skill and ability. How he did win the day, turning an almost certain defeat into a superb triumph, makes one of the most magnificent chapters in Princeton's athletic history, and forms a fitting climax to an athletic career which for brilliancy, for lustre, and for achievement will always be one of Princeton's most cherished possessions. The memory of it is sweeter, and the appreciation more profound because the much loved and idolized "Tilly" no longer lives, and because of the sad, untimely tragedy which closed his life.

Lamar was a born athlete—perhaps it would be more exact to say that he was a born football player. He took to the game as naturally in his freshman year as if he had spent all his days on the gridiron; whereas, as a matter of fact, like that other football giant, "Hector" Cowan, '88, he knew nothing of the game before he entered Princeton. Yet every man in '86 remembers to this day how the slender, pale, boyish, but determined Lamar showed a touch of the stuff in him the first day the freshmen of '86 lined up in an indeterminate and confused mob on the improvised field between Reunion and the Gym. By nightfall the freshmen were predicting great things of the quiet little fellow from Georgia, and within a few weeks the whole college was aware that Lamar was a coming man. In a short time he became the bright particular star of his class team, and his brilliant work against Lawrenceville confirmed the judgment of all who had followed his work, that Lamar was destined to achieve great and glorious things on the football field.

It was not the custom then—more's the pity—to seek athletic material in the freshmen class, and to develop it with a view to the strengthening of future teams. In freshmen year Lamar did not even play on the "scrub," but in sophomore year his splendid running, dodging, and ground-gaining, his sureness of foot, and his marvellous aptitude for the fine points of the game, secured for him the coveted position of half-back on the 'Varsity, and enabled him to begin the brilliant work which ended with the final touchdown at New Haven, and made the score for that day 6 to 5 in favor of Princeton.

Lamar was a man of many fine traits. He possessed a courage that never faltered, and grit which never failed him on the football field or anywhere else where grit was needed. He had that sense of fairness which comes from a gentle lineage and that courtesy which is typical in the South. Both mind and body were alert, and each worked sympathetically with the other. Deeply imbedded in his character was the trait of modesty. There was nothing of the braggart or boaster about him, and he was as modest and unassuming after his great victory over Yale as he was when he played "freshman" football behind Reunion Hall. He was loyal to the last degree in adversity as well as in success to his friends, to his class, and to Princeton. He gave to his Alma Mater the best that was in him, and he asked for nothing in return. He never shirked, he did not complain, but he was ready at all times to fight for the Orange and Black to the last inch, and until the last note of the referee's closing whistle died away.

This was the young man who won for Princeton a championship and for himself an undying renown. Quiet and dignified as his life in college had been, he was destined for an early and tragic death, which brought unfeigned grief to every member of his class and to every man who had been in college with him. After graduation he went into business at his home near Augusta, Georgia, his commercial enterprises eventually taking him to Central America, where, amid the beautiful and quiet scenery of the tropics, he felt that he found an ideal place for a home. "It reminds me so much in its beauty and quietness," he wrote to a friend, "of Princeton, and it is here that I expect to abide for the rest of my days." This hope was not to be fulfilled, for on the occasion of one of his trips home, while rowing through a flooded district of Georgia with a girl companion, the boat was suddenly overturned, and in his heroic efforts to rescue his companion he was caught in the whirlpool and sank to death in the twinkling of an eye, while his companion was dragged to safety. Thus, faithful, courageous, and true to the last, "Tilly" Lamar died, mourned by all who knew him, never to be forgotten by those who loved him. In fond memorial of him, the class of '86 will erect a club-house in Princeton, to be used as the class headquarters as long as the class shall live, and to be known as Lamar House, a memorial of one of whom it may truly be said:

"To live in hearts we leave behind,
Is not to die."

WILLIAM EDWARD DURELL, '80.

All who know of Princeton's athletic history will remember William Edward Durell, '80, the sturdy little outfielder and second-baseman who, year after year, stepped first of the nine to the bat. He entered Princeton in 1885, the youngest man in his class. In his first year he did not try for the 'Varsity nine, but his brilliant work on the class nine, and especially his hard, sure batting assured him his position in his second year, and he played in the outfield in 1887, 1888, and 1889. Entering the Electrical School immediately after graduation he remained in Princeton the two additional years required and took the degree of Electrical Engineer; he was also a member of the 'Varsity nine during these years, 1890 and 1891, covering second base both seasons. He was one of the quickest, surest fielders that ever played on a Princeton nine, covering a phenomenal amount of ground in the outfield, and playing a record game when called in to second. He seemed never nervous, never despondent, but cool and steady with clear judgment; he was a constant inspiration to his fellow-players, and a source of confidence to the Princeton stands. We always felt sure of "Little Eddie"; and how glad we were to see him come to the bat at a critical moment of the game! More than one flattering offer from professional managers attested his skill, and his untiring interest and endeavor contributed largely to whatever degree of success Princeton had in baseball during these years.

Durell took equally high rank as a student, showing the same ability and the same faithful, conscientious devotion to his college work. After completing the course in the Electrical School he went to Berlin, to specialize still further in his chosen subject. In the spring of 1892, while travelling in Italy, he was taken ill and after a very short sickness died in Rome on April 6, of congestion of the brain. He lies in Rome in the beautiful Protestant cemetery by the side of Keats and Shelley, and his classmates have marked his grave with an appropriate tribute. It was impossible to know Durell and not to like him. He was so straightforward, so sincere, and so unaffected; and he was the staunchest and truest of friends. He always chose the right, and his character and his life were everywhere an influence for good.

WALTER CHARLES DOHM, '90.

No athlete of Princeton has ever carried the name and fame of his Alma Mater so far, by his athletic prowess, as Walter Charles Dohm of the class of '90.

Born at Princeton on March 25, 1869, he prepared for college at the Princeton Preparatory School. There he played football, and, following his natural inclinations, became a very speedy back on his freshman year team. His clever running attracted the attention of Jim Robinson, who advised him not to continue at football but to devote himself to track athletics. That the advice was sound may be seen from Dohm's remarkable record, and there is no doubt that his success and fame, coming at a time when Princeton had no first-rate men on the track, had an immediate value in directing the eyes of undergraduates and alumni to this branch of sport.

His record is one of successes from the start. Beginning May 9, 1888, by winning first in the 440-yards, in the trials for the Mott Haven team, he brought back, three days later, the handsome Cedarhurst cup which he, a novice, had taken away from the veterans, Banks and Downs. He went abroad during the summer of 1888, and succeeded in establishing a record in Ireland for the 220-yard dash, but failed to reach his own high standard in England. In the fall of that year he secured the American championship, as well as the Canadian in the 440-yards, both of which titles he successfully defended in 1889. Having attacked the half-mile during the spring of 1889 by defeating Conneff, the English crack, in a magnificent match race at Princeton, he added the half-mile Canadian championship for 1889 to his other laurels.

So phenomenal was his success that in October, 1889, after an athletic career of seventeen months, he had participated in thirty-one contests in which he had taken twenty-five first, three second, and three third places. In June, 1890, he took fourteen points in the class games for the Peace Cup—all the points that '90 secured. During these games he tried the pole-vault, and the running broad-jump, and had second place in each event. The jump pleased him and at the intercollegiate meet of that year he had secured first and made a record of 21-ft. 4-in. He held Princeton record in the 100-yards, 440-yards, and the half-mile, Irish record for the 220-yards, American and English collegiate 440-yards, and American amateur half-mile.

With enough of success to turn the head of the coolest man, Dohm remained unspoiled to the end. He brought a fine enthusiasm to all his work, but his ambition told him it was not along the lines of athletics that the highest success was to be sought. He is an ideal type of college amateur, for, instead of devoting himself to athletics, where his name alone would have had a value, he turned his back on the popularity that surrounds the successful athlete and began his newspaper work.

During his senior year he had written articles on training, etc., for various papers and magazines, and soon after graduation he began his work with the McClure Publishing Co., going from their employ to a position as reporter on the New York Herald. Over-exposure during the cholera scare brought on "la grippe" and pneumonia followed. His good constitution brought him through, but his throat, which had never been strong, had been further weakened. In the fall of 1893, duty sent him as a reporter to the Princeton Pennsylvania football game at Manheim. It was a day to test the strongest, but Dohm persisted in doing his duty and in a few weeks the fatal weakness in his throat had become so alarming that he was obliged to go to Denver. The remedy was too late, and on May 8, 1894, his last work was done. His remains lie in the cemetery at Princeton with those of so many others who have contributed to the fame of Old Nassau.

As a classmate he was bright and cheerful, and universally known and liked. As a sportsman, he was as fair an opponent as could be found: an amateur "pur sang"; as a man, he gave all promise of a fine, full career of usefulness.

But death was inexorable.

FREDERICK BROKAW, '92.

Fred. Brokaw, of the class of '92, was catcher on the Princeton 'Varsity nine, and at the close of his Junior year gave his life to save a woman from drowning. He entered college from Lawrenceville in the fall of 1888. Tall, strong, and graceful, the handsomest man in his class, with a reputation as a baseball star and an all-round athlete, he was from the beginning a leader among his classmates and a prominent figure in Princeton. He was the catcher of the 'Varsity in his first season. The College remembers his perfect poise and coolness in victory or defeat, his unerring steps and swift clean throwing; remembers how he used to stand half turned toward the pitcher, feet close together, but moving slightly up and down, and recalls with thankfulness his long low hits. But his countrymen remember him in his noble sacrifice and death. He was sitting with a friend on the beach at Elberon, N. J., on the 24th of June, 1891, while three women from a neighboring cottage were bathing. Seeing that the women were in danger he sprang into the water to their assistance. One was near enough to the shore to save herself. Calling to his friend who had followed him to save the second, Brokaw swam to the third, the farthest out. He was a famous swimmer, but the girl's own struggles and the strong current hindered him, and he sank with the girl whom he tried to rescue before help could reach him.

The New York Herald, in an editorial on the day after the funeral, said of him: "The loss of such a fresh, vigorous, and valuable life is an incident not to be passed over in silence. He had youth, health, and an alluring future; but he spent them all in the noblest of all causes. His name has become a household word, but at a great price. Courage always excites our admiration; but there is something divine in an impulse which drives us to risk our all to save others." In 1896 the Brokaw Memorial Building and Field were dedicated to his memory by his father and his fellow Princetonians.

APPENDIX D. SONGS OF THE GAMES.

The following incomplete collection of football and baseball songs is published by request for the sake of the associations which they will arouse. Their ephemeral character anticipates any apology for their poetical faults, ribald sentiments, and familiar tone.

1889.

THE GHOST OF POE'S RAVEN.

A DIRGE

SUNG BY A MEMBER OF THE HARVARD FOOTBALL TEAM OF 1889, AFTER THE GAME WITH PRINCETON.

Once upon a field momentous, while I faced that team portentous,
Making many a slug and tackle followed by a flow of gore,
While the prejudiced ascetic, jaundiced, glum and unpoetic,
Damned all manly sports athletic; suddenly I heard a roar,
And a ball went whizzing past me, whizzing as I'd seen before,
Only Ames, and nothing more.

Ah, distinctly I remember, it was in the cool November,
Yet the perspiration trickled down from every opening pore.
Eagerly I wished the morrow—vainly I had sought to borrow
From our protests cure for sorrow—sorrow for my legs so sore,
For my lacerated nose and ears which Cowan tore.

Nameless here for evermore.

And the ball so wildly snapped and Edgar Allan Poe, the captain
Thrilled me—filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before,
So that now to stop the thumping of my heart I took to jumping,
Jumping out against those rushers who my knocks ignore,
Jumping on the back of Janeway as he'd done on mine before—
But I'll do that nevermore.

Just when I could see no longer, something larger, thicker, stronger
Than the hippopotamus that I had felt before,
Came upon my bare head rapping, and like trip-hammer came tapping,
Not to mention fiercely slapping, slapping that I most deplore.
I've since learned that this was Black, but at the time I dodged and swore,
Only swore and nothing more.

Could it be that our "protesting" carried on with zeal unresting
Would not "down" the well-trained boys who black and orange wore?
Can't "Professional" be stamped on these Princetonians who tramp on Harvard last year, and thus clamped on fetters which our tempers tore?
Then I seemed to hear the Ghost of Poe's great-uncle's Raven snore:
"You must wear them evermore!"

Then I faintly essayed smiling, but the Orange team came piling, Stamping "iron-heels" as Edward stamped in days of yore.
Ask me not where Princeton's "sand" is! It within that football band is!
I tory within its hand is!—Ghostly bird from off Poe's door!
Tell me! Must the crimson yield to this Princetonian bore?
Quoth Poe's Raven: "See the Score!"

Now, the second half beginning, Harvard sent the leather spinning,
And a ghastly shade of hope I felt that we might score
But that wizard plunger Channing, all the field of action scanning
Suddenly the oblong spanning, through our sprawling rushers tore,
Tell me! Bird of evil! Shall we make no touch-downs anymore?
Quoth Poe's Raven: "Nevermore!"

Won't the deadly "affidavit" help our cause—redeem it—save it?
Won't our charges of offenses we've committed o'er and o'er,
Help to dash those tigers headwards? Send them bleeding homewards, bedwards?
No! there's Princeton's Duncan Edwards, brave and loyal to the core,
While he's there we can't impose upon the public any more!
Quoth Poe's Raven: "Nevermore."

Then there came a horrid rushing as of locomotives pushing,
Great pile-drivers crushing, Princeton always to the fore,
Battering rams our stomachs pressing, caused sensations most depressing,
While our foes, our weakness guessing, rolled the score up more and more,
Little Ames, the ever-present, kicked a goal as heretofore,
Just a goal, and nothing more.

And that little Poe is sitting, like his uncle's bird unflitting,
Calmly gloating o'er the strange unprecedented score,
While our team—their molars grinding—solace in our bruises sought, not finding—Tears our eyes completely blinding, have to listen o'er and o'er
To that "forty-one to fifteen,"—awful figures we deplore!

MORAL—Protest nevermore.

The Yale men say their team can play,
And that they'll surely win,
But just the same they'll lose the game
Likewise their hard-earned tin.
For Riggs will break their centre,
And King will do the same,
And you can bet on Johnny Poe
To play the Princeton game.

The Harvard line they broke so fine,
They think they're out of sight,
But now they're met a team, you bet,
For Princeton's she's all right!
Her rush will break their centre,
Her backs go through the holes,
And Princeton wins the game, boys,
When Homans kicks the goals.

1893.

Do you want to know who we are?
And why we're here to-day?
We've come from old Nassau,
And we're in the fight to stay.
We have squelched old "Penny's" roar;
The Tigers cry for more,
We must have Eli's gore—see.

1894.

As I walk along Manhattan Field
In an independent way;
You can hear the people say
They will win the game to-day.
You can hear Yale sigh and wish to die;
You can see the orange wave on high,
For the team that brought the championship to Princeton.

We must and will beat Eli;
We've done it times before.
We shut them out in '93;
They really couldn't score.
We'll swipe them on Manhattan Field
Despite old Eli's luck;
And show them on December first,
That Princeton wins by pluck.

Oh me! Oh my!
How we will beat old Eli.

Swim out, old Eli;
We'll swipe the men in blue,
Wheeler's in the centre
And he knows just what to do.
When the Princeton cyclone strikes 'em,
It will spoil 'em just a few.
Then swim out, old Eli,
Swim out, out, out.

Once more we'll meet them, once more we'll beat them;
Rushing the ball over, just as of yore.
Doggie will fox them, and our team will box them.
How the deuce did you find that out?
We've done it before.

1895.

Sing a song together, boys,
The Harvard team's in town;
They won't do a thing at all
But try and turn us down.
Wait until the game is o'er
And then we'll own the town,
While we go marching through Harvard.

Nassau! Nassau! we'll win the game to-day;
Nassau! Nassau! we'll show 'em how to play.
The team is working to a man,
They're in the game to stay,
While we are marching through Harvard.

We'll rally round the cannon, boys,
And build our fire bright ;
To down the Princeton Tigers
They must try another fight.
They found they could not buck the line,
For Biff was out for fight,
While we go marching through Harvard.

Our old-time spirit,
Let Harvard hear it ;
We'll fight to-day,
Our old-time way.
Biffy Lea is the King of the Tigers,
Let her go, let her go, let her go.

There's only one team in this world for me,
Only one team good for victory ;
It's neither Yale nor Harvard,
Nor is it yet U. of P.
But it's the plucky team
That comes from New Jersey.

Oh! Rosey did run down the field with the ball,
And the team played on ;
There wasn't a Yale man could touch him at all,
And the team played on ;
Brink Thorne, though so clever, used every endeavor,
But couldn't get near him at all,
The Princeton team scored, the Yale team was floored,
And the team played on.

BASEBALL.

While watching a game which I will not name,
In June, on a bright summer's day,
I saw a large crowd who were shouting aloud,
And urging their heroes to play.
They all watched to see what the outcome would be,
Their nerves they could scarce stand the strain ;
In an hour or so, as I saw the crowd go,
I heard a Princetonian exclaim :

REFRAIN.

Yale may have seen better days,
When she was in her prime ;
Yale may have seen better days,
Once upon a time.
For at New Haven she fell,
She cannot mend her ways.
Some poor old roosters are mourning for Yale,
Who has seen better days.

The ball game is won, but the task is not done,
We'll have to get at 'em this Fall.
But between you and me, perhaps you'll agree
We'll lick 'em again at football.
On Manhattan Field our boys will not yield,
'Neath old Nassau's banner we'll throng ;
And when we come out with a whoop and a shout,
May we all be singing this song :

REFRAIN.

KELLY'S HIT.*

PRINCETON vs. YALE ; NEW HAVEN, 23 JUNE, 1896.

"He seen his duty and he done it"

The following poem was recited at the meeting of the New York alumni Through the courtesy of the author, M'Cready Sykes, we are able to print it in full.

Attend, good folks of every sort ; give ear unto my tale,
The while I tell that wondrous game the day we played with Yale.
It happened in the month of June, when all the field were green,
And Eli's sons were gathered there, and many a jag was seen.

Right merry rang the bells of Yale to greet the festal day ;
The flags were streaming from her towers and all her streets were gay.
For now the fateful day was come when all mankind should see
Old Eli's star blaze fierce on high, or sink beneath the sea.

*Copyright, 1897, by M'Cready Sykes.

For twice two times the nines had fought, yet meet once more they must ;
For twice had Princeton lost, and twice had Eli bit the dust ;
And on whose brow fair Victory now should place the laurel crown,
For them to-night the beer should flow ; nay, they should own the town.

All Eli's sons are in the place ; they fill the ancient town,
With tens of thousands pressing close to see Nassau thrown down.
Yet stayed the Tigers not away, though small their band and few,
Strangers within a hostile town whose very skies were blue.

With joyful shouts they board the train, Duke Burleigh in the van ;
Patsy Durand, and Williams, too, the literary man,
And now Bert Milbank climbs aboard, prepared to do his stunt ;
Likewise Jim Blake, that full-back staunch who never missed a punt.

Now Andy Imbrie and his pa, Phil King and many more ;
Bill Meredith, and Ralph D. Smith, and Humphrey, '94 ;
With jovial soul they shout and sing and raise the lusty cheer ;
And loud the Princeton slogan rings : " More beer ! More beer ! More beer !"

Down those old grads' exultant throats the amber liquid sped ;
And many a Tiger tosses high his fast expanding head.
New Haven comes ; they line the field ; the teams come trotting out ;
" Play ball !" and Yale bangs out two runs, and all the Eli's shout.

Now Titus takes the Tigers' bat ; a hush comes over all.
He fans the air ; the Yaseses root ; he cannot find the ball.
The game goes on with breathless pace, with Yale two runs ahead ;
One inning's past ; the second's gone, and still the Eli's lead.

But Aleck Moffatt, stout of heart, cries out with a mighty shout,
" Boys, Princeton never lost a game till the last man was out !"
Then Jerry Bradley makes for first, and runs on Smith's misplay ;
And Easton knocks and gets his base, but not content to stay.

For now great Kelly, strong of arm, steps forth with mighty stride,
And cracks the welkin with the ball, and lo ! the score is tied.
And then from out that Princeton gang goes forth a mighty cheer
That thunders through New Haven's walls and fills Yale's heart with fear.

Five innings, two to two ; no change, but hark to Princeton's din !
As Smith runs round and gets to third, and Bradley knocks him in.
And now the Princeton rooters howl ; the tumult sounds afar,
And Freddy Moses' voice rings out with " S-T-A-R—Star !"

But brief the Tigers' triumph now ; their cheer dies to a wail
As Trudeau bangs a three-base hit, and Bartlet scores for Yale.
One howl from Yale ; then all grows still ; men's hearts beat fast and high ;
And still the mighty games goes on, and still the score's a tie.

The pace is waxing fierce and hot ; now neck to neck they run ;
Hushed is the crowd in dread suspense, and Fentress' voice is dumb,
Ten innings played ; the score's still tied ; again Yale fails to score ;
And Princeton puts two men on base, and needs one good hit more.

" Who's next to bat ?" One smashing hit one hit will pull her through
And lo ! the cheers break out afresh as Kelly looms in view.
He stoops and kneels before the plate and dusts it with his hat,
Like to that mighty man of yore, great Casey at the bat.

The banners wave ; the rooters howl ; wild fury seizes all.
" Now hir'er !" " Tear 'em up !" " Raise h-l !" " Oh, Kelly, swot the ball !"
" Knock her a mile run like Sam Hill—oh, give the ball a welt !"
But Tracy Harris lifts his hand—" Keep quiet, Westervelt !"
And Kelly smiles a dreadful smile, and hitches up his belt.

Good Lord ! the ball flies straight to heaven, and smites the glittering stars.
And as around the walls of Troy of old great Ajax ran,
So Kelly now sweeps down the field, and all the gods look on.

" Run, Kelly, run !" and swift and sure he tears, nor looks aside ;
The coaches yell—the dead might hear—" Don't stop slide, Kelly, SLIDE !"
He's safe ! Hurrah ! The day is won ! They throng upon the field,
And bear great Kelly high aloft, their buckler, sword, and shield.

Oh, gray hills of New England, your brows are bathed in gloom ;
The foe is in your very walls ; the trophy's left your room.
Oh, gray hills of New England, all vanquished lies your love ;
The blue falls trailing to the earth ; the orange waves above.

And still when old grads gather round, the pleasant tale is told ;
And still we talk of Kelly's hit, and how we won it cold ;
And tell, the while with joyous soul we quaff the foaming ale,
Of how the championship was won the day we played at Yale.

Once more we'll meet them, once more we'll beat them,
Rushing the ball over just as of yore ;
Gaily will fox them, Brokaw will box them.
How the deuce did you find that out ?
We've done it before.

Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha!
 There's going to be trouble for Yale.
 Just watch the Tiger thumping,
 He will set old Eli jumpin'
 There's going to be trouble for Yale

You will twist the Tiger's tail, I don't think,
 You will twist the Tiger's tail, I don't think,
 You will twist the Tiger's tail, I don't think.
 When he gets Eli down, just watch him wink.

Air.—FACULTY SONG.

Here's to "Garry" Cochran; he Is the finest end that you can see,
 He'll lead us on to victory;
 Oh, here's to "Garry" three times three!

CHORUS.

"Garry," "Garry" Cochran,
 "Garry," "Garry" Cochran,
 We must not fail to vanquish Yale,
 And do it this afternoon.

Here's to Craig our minister end,
 A helping hand he's sure to lend,
 Old Princeton's honor he'll defend.
 Oh! here's to Craig our minister end.—CHORUS.

Here's to Guard and Tackle Holt,
 Goes into play like a thunderbolt,
 Old Eli's line he's sure to jolt.
 Here's to Guard and Tackle Holt.—CHORUS.

Here's to Sophomore Hillebrand,
 In last year's game he had a hand;
 You bet he's got just lots of sand.
 Oh! here's to Sophomore Hillebrand.—CHORUS.

Here's to Crowdis, we call him "Slim," They'll find it hard to get through him;
 He's brawn and muscle to the brim.
 Oh! here's to Crowdis, we call him "Slim"—CHORUS.

Here's to Edwards, large and square,
 He plays the game and plays it fair;
 Just watch the ball, for he'll be there.
 Oh! here's to Edwards large and square.—CHORUS.

Here's to Booth who snaps the ball,
 Through him they'll make no gains at all;
 Just watch him on that Freshman fall.
 Oh! here's to Booth who snaps the ball.—CHORUS.

Here's to Baird, who you will say
 Is the centre and life of every play;
 Just watch him get the ball away.
 Oh! here's to Baird, hoo-ray, hoo-ray.—CHORUS.

Here's to Kelly, we call him "King,"
 To Yale he hasn't done a thing;
 Three championships he's helped to bring.
 Oh! here's to Kelly, we call him "King."—CHORUS.

Here's to Billy Bannard, oh!
 Around the end he's sure to go
 For ten or twenty yards or so;
 Here's to Billy Bannard, oh! CHORUS.

Here's to Wheeler, isn't he fine?
 He'll plough his way right thro' the line,
 And make his distances every time.
 Oh! here's to Wheeler, isn't he fine?—CHORUS.

Here's to Reiter! What a treat
 To see him run and keep his feet;
 For as a half he can't be beat,
 Their ends will be his easy meat.—CHORUS.

A capital theme for a football team
 That plays for old Nassau,
 Is last year's game when Yale made six
 And we made twenty four.
 Our peerless team made Eli seem
 A novice at the game—i-ame;
 And though they thought they were real hot stuff,
 We got there just the same.

CHORUS.

Then cheer, old Nassau, cheer
 For once again this year,
 With Captain Cochran there to steer,
 We'll make old Eli sick with fear;
 When Reiter hits their line
 Jim Rodgers will resign,
 And the whole Yale crew will follow him, too,
 In the wake of their baseball nine.

Our rush line great is very sedate,
 But fond of amusement, too;
 It will play the game and put to shame
 The wearers of the blue;
 Our quarter-back is a crack-a-jack;
 Just watch the oval sail-i-ail.
 As he fires drop-kicks between the sticks
 In the teeth of good old Yale.—CHORUS.

There's a college we call Princeton,
 In New Jersey,
 Where they play a game of football
 That you should see.

And it's rush them through the centre,
 And run them 'round the end,
 With a Tiger and three times three,
 Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha!

They are going to play with Eli,
 In their own Yale town,
 And they'll play with Princeton spirit
 Which will never, never down;
 Then "tear 'em up, 'old Princeton,
 And "get into the game,"
 With a Tiger and three times three.

When you see the Tigers start to play,
 Then you'll know who'll win the game to-day,
 For they will rush that ball
 Till they rush it all the way,
 And score a touch for Princeton.

Oh! Princeton,
 When you hear our gallant leader's call,
 Then lay low and see them rush that ball,
 For they will smash Yale's line,
 Till they'll have no line at all.
 There'll be a hot time for Princeton to-night!

The following two doggerels were written merely to fill gaps on a couple of occasions of alumni gatherings. They were never intended for publication, and their only excuse for publication now is their preservation among the archives of the ephemeral minstrelsy and folk-lore of the time. The note of jubilation running through them will therefore be interpreted not as indicative of a beating of drums in the market-place, but as a record merely of curious intratribal customs in vogue in celebrating athletic games, and of interest to the archæologist and anthropologist only. ## YE ANTIENTE PROPESHYE &amp; YE LITTEL POE.

(POE'S RUN.)

12 NOVEMBER, 1898.

Godde's Blessynge on our noble Lande;
 Give Eare, good People alle;
 A myghtie Fyghte I have to tell
 In Princetoune did befall.

Yale's Feete-Balle Teame hath travelled doun
 In Hose and Jerkyns fyne;
 & yeys have sworne a myghtye Oathe
 To crosse ye Princetoune Lynne.

Ye Princetoune Menne don canvasses Smocques
 & Armour on ye Nose,
 Wythe orange P's across ye Chestes,
 & Quarterynges on ye Hose.

Kynge Hillebrand his myghtie Hostes
 Hath mustered on ye Playne;
 Palmer & Wheeler, Ayres & Booth,
 & more I cannot name.

Edwards was there, & Crowdis too,
Among ye valiante Knyghtes;—
Crowdis, whom all ye Classes calle
Ye Manne of Seventye Fyghtes.

Kynge Chamberlain uponne ye Grounde
His azure Gauntlet flynges;
"Ye Thynges we'll do unto yon Teame," Quod he, "will not be Thynges!"

"Yet alle shall play ye Game full fayre,
"Nor none shall work foule Hurte;
"For each hath ta'en his Foeman's Hande,
"& wille not doe him Dyrte;

"Not such as, rageynge 'gainst his Foe,
"Forgetteth Feete-Balle Lawe,
"& (when ye Umpyre heedethe not)
"Doth paste him in ye Jawe."

Ye Menne hath mustered to ye Fyghte;
Ye Worlde is there to see;
& alle ye People glad recalle
Ye Antiente Propheseye—

Yt East may turne again to dust;
Old Northe maybe tumble lowe;
But whyle Grasse g ows and Watere runnes
Princetoune shall have a Poe.

For Johnson Poe & Peter Poe
Hath borne her Bannere hyghe;
& Joen yclept. & lyttell Nat,
Hath made ye Eli's crye.

So now when Arthur takes ye Fielde
Ye Eli's weepeth stronge,
& rend yre Cloathes, & Crye aloude
"Howe longe, Oh Lord! howe longe?"

Ye Menne from Yale hath rushed ye Balle
Close to ye Tygeres' Goale;
& Princetoune cusseth tyll she ryskes
Her Presbyterian Soule.

Againe Yale crashes through ye Lyne;
Againe & once againe—
God wot! but fiteene Yardes remayne,
& eke yeye make it tenne!

God's Rede! ye furiose Fyghte is fierce;
Yeye plunge, & tackle lowe,
& in ye Onslaughte on ye Lyne
Hath cryppled Arthur Poe!

He rubbes his Knee & lympe the sore,
& stryvenethe with Payne;
& Princetoune, quotha "Zounds! 'tis cleare
"He cannot playe againe."

Durston hath glaunched a scornfulle Glaunce,
& on ye Tygeres turned,
& sayde, with supercilious Smyle,
"Ye Propheseye be durned!"

Ye valiante Poe, though bent with Payne,
For once Chaunce more doth begge;
He wotteth welle his Lymbe will last;
He pullethe Eli's Legge.

& nowe Yale taketh uppe ye Balle
To consummate ye ynche.
Ye Tygeres fyghte with horrid Frowne,
& Eli doth not flynche.

& never mortale Manne shall knowe
How ye Thynges came aboute
But from yt close-pressed Masse of Menne
Ye Feete-Balle poppeth oute!

& Poe hath rushe! within ye Breache—
Towards Erthe one Second kneeled,—
He tuckes ye Balle benethe his arme,
& saunteres down ye Fielde

From Eli's Lyne a Crye of Rage
Doth rende ye quyverynge Ayre,
& all ye Teame with one Accourde
Poursueth him for fayre.

Lyke to a Whyrle-Wynde, swifte McBride
Tears downe ye burnynge Course, & cries to Heaven: "A Horse! A Horse!
"Mye Kyngedoume for a Horse!"

Poe heares ye crashynge Hosts behynde,
Ye weste Wynde fannes his Face,
Whenas, perceyvynge of ye Thynges,
He quyquenethe his Face.

His Eyes are on ye dystante Goale;
He lookes behynde him not,
But from ye Scripture learned in Youthe Rememberethe Mrs. Lot.

Ye Multitude doth yelle & shoute,
Ye Tumulte fylles ye Ayre;
& Gabriel noteth on his Sleeve—
"Ye Welkin needs Repayre."

Ye Eli's tears in fierce Pursuite,
But Poe eludes yem alle;
He rushes 'twixt ye quyverynge Postes,
& sytteth on ye Balle.

Soe, in ye Mannere here writ doun,
Did Princetoune Wynne ye Fyghte;
& Yale hath made a mentale Note
"Ye Propheseye's alle ryghte."

& Edgar Allan Poe ye Greate—
Ye Wrytere of sweet Prose
& Poesie henceforth is called,
Ye Uncle of ye Poes,

& toe ye Lytanye in Church
Ye Eli's addeth, thus;—
"From alle yt damned Trybe of Poes,
"Goode Lorde deliver us."

" & to retrieve yt Daye
" We challenge Princetoune to our Gates
" To meet in bloodye Fraye.
- " Ye Fyghte was fierce, and lustylyle
" Ye rampante Tygeres played;

" Of ye fyrste Teame noue none remaines
" But Edwards, Pell & Poe."
- " Swete Youthe, I wot Yale had ye Cynche
" When thus ye Tygeres fell!"
" Nay, Fathere! pl' yne thou haste not hearde
" Ye Tayle at Yale yeye telle,—

- " " Goode Lorde, deliver us! Goode Lorde!—
" Yeye passe ye Balle belowe;
" 'Twas lowe, and soe 'twas apropos
" Untoe ye Toe of Poe).
- " Ye Mathematic Professoure
" Lookes doune, and cries ' Ha! Ha!
" To kycke ye Goale Poe needes must make

- " Ye Goale is safe; ye Talke of Feare
" Is naughte but Persiflage;
" Wythe yt short Legge ys Youthe hathe not " Sufficient Leverage."
- " But Arthur Poe hathe kyckt ye Balle
" (Oh, woefulle, woefulle Daye!)
" As straighte as myghte Dewey's Gunnes
" Upon ye fyrste of Maye.
- " Straighte flies ye Balle; McBride dothe crye
" Upon ye cursed Syghte;
" Oh! woulde to God I had this Houre,
" " Bill Libbey's Tayle-less Kyte."
- " Thus, Fathere, Princetoune wonne ye Game,
" And I have synned thus—
" For in my Wrathe I cryed aloude;
" " Oh, damn yat lyttell Cuss!"
- " McBride hath ta'en Bill Edwards' Hand;
" Edwards McBride's hath ta'en;
" Noue, bye ye Shade of Witherspoon,
" " I grete thee for a Manne!"
- " McBride bath lookt him 'twixt the eyes;
" " Our Names by Fame be writ;
" Far fitter to have fit this Fyghte
" " Then fifty Fyghtes I've fit."
- Ye Fathere smyled: " Mye sorrowhyngye Youthe,
" No Tayle-less Kyte, I deem
" Y'ile needed; thou shoudait eke have asked
" A Poe-less Princetoune Teame.
- " But for thy synfulle Prayer, 'tis past,
" & thou art punisht sore;
" In Heaven 'tis wrytten yt ye Poes
" Shall flouryshe more and more.
- " But as for thee, when twice six Moones
" Hath round ye Worlde revolved,
" Go, wax ye Harvardes offe ye Erthe,
" & ye shall be absolved."

"HERE COME THE ELIS."

(Tune—"MY ANN ELIZA.")

Yale men are very plucky
 When they get a show ;
 Sometimes they're more than lucky,
 But we've got a Poe.
 One year he makes a touchdown,
 Next—kicks the ball ;
 How they can ever beat us,
 Can't see at all !
 Victory, the bird of omen,
 Flying around,
 Sails over Nassau's gridiron,
 Lights on the ground,
 And when you see that rooster
 Starting to crow,
 Standing right in his shadow
 You'll find a Poe.

CHORUS.

Here come the Elis,
 We'll give them a surprise,
 Open wide both their eyes,
 Teach them football.
 Princeton can never fall,
 You can't twist the Tiger's tail—
 We are from Old Nassau.

1901.

(Tune—Chorus of "MY DINAH.")

Eli, you'd better brush by
 You are not ace high
 With Old Nassau.
 We're going to fix you,
 The Tiger licks you,
 We're sorry for you,
 Boo, boolah, boo !

This time you've got a ball nine
 You think is quite fine,
 But, oh beware !
 Our team's a lulu,
 We're apt to fool you,
 So sing your boola
 Boo, boolah, boo !

(Tune—"JUST BECAUSE SHE MADE DEM GOO-GOO EYES.")

A big fat Tiger strolled along
 One heated summer day,
 He met some boys from the Nutmeg State
 Who with him tried to play.
 He laughed out loud
 When he saw their crowd.
 "Ah, children," growled that sacred beas',
 "I fear you've struck a snag.
 You can't win games by throwing bluffs,
 So please don't start to brag.
 Your big white 'Y'
 Don't scare a fly."

CHORUS.

Just because they wear the big white Y's
 They think they'll win the game
 And pinch the prize.
 We're the best they ever saw
 And we've come to Old Nassau
 Just to drape with crape
 Those big white "Y's."

Oh, Yale is Yale, but Princeton men
 Have licked her oft before.
 To-day's the day
 It comes again
 So hear the Tiger roar.
 He's on the trail
 Of Eli Yale
 And every time his tail doth wag
 You see Yale's fielders run.
 While up and on the sphere will go
 Until it scrapes the sun
 His little wags
 Count just four bags.—CHORUS.
